POLICY INITIATIVES TO ACCELERATE ECONOMIC GROWTH

D.K.Srivastava

Growth and Inflation

In evaluating the impact of economic policy of the Modi government, two summary indicators of success relate to growth and inflation. Measuring growth in terms of the new national income accounts series with 2011-12 as the base year, growth of GDP in 2014-15 is estimated at 7.3%, which is 0.4% points higher than 6.9% achieved in 2013-14. Clearly, there is an improvement, but it is only marginal in magnitude. On the inflation front, the success is far sharper. Measuring inflation through the consumer price index (CPI), inflation in 2014-15 was at 6.4%, well below the inflation rate in 2013-14 at 9.5%. Measuring inflation through the wholesale price index (WPI), the all commodities index showed an inflation rate in 2014-15 at 2.1% as compared to 6.0% in 2013-14, clearly an improvement of 4% points. While inflation control achieved by the new government is notable, some external factors like fall in the global crude oil prices also played a crucial role. Fall in global crude oil prices also translates into drop in the fuel and energy prices in India. This has had both a direct and indirect effect on prices in the country. Fuel and energy prices have a significant share in both the CPI and WPI series. The overall inflation rate falls directly when the fuel and energy prices fall. Furthermore, a fall in these prices, affecting power and transport costs, leads to a reduction in unit costs in all the sectors, viz., agriculture, industry and services.

Therefore, there is a fall in the overall inflation. However, government's policies did help in the overall control of inflation. It managed the supply situation of food

September 25, 2014. It was designed to facilitate investment, foster innovation, enhance skill development, and protect intellectual property. Twenty five sectors of potential investors, both domestic and external, have shown interest. However, Make in India faces several constraints. First, the current global growth prospects and the demand for Indian exports are weak. Second, the manufacturing sector is highly capital intensive but our saving and investment ratios are quite low in comparison to our own achievement in the past. Preempting these savings for the manufacturing sector would require drawing these away from the services sector. Third, there is an excess of manufacturing capacity in the world and even if we succeed in attracting investment, it will be difficult to compete with western economies who have access to better technology or China which has better items quite efficiently, did not yield to pressure for increasing minimum support prices, and kept a check on fiscal deficit. There may still be short term supply pressures on inflation if we face deficient rainfall in the current year. On the whole, however, given that inflation is broadly under control, the issue now is how to strengthen the growth momentum.

Make in India: Manufacturing as Driver of Growth

The hallmark of government's growth strategy, and the first one to take off, was 'Make in India', which was launched as a major new national program on were identified for emphasis. Make in India clearly stated that the new government sees 'manufacturing' as the key driver of growth and employment in India. The relevance of this initiative comes from the fact that as compared to many other developing countries, particularly China, the share of industry in general and manufacturing in particular, is much lower in India. In recent history, no economic power has been successful without having a large and powerful manufacturing sector. But the initial success of this campaign, in terms of actual investment, has been limited although quite a number

CAREERS IN PUBLISHING

Vivek Mehra

Publishing is NOT printing. This is perhaps the reason many aspirants shy away from considering mainstream publishing. It is true that publishing began with printers and printing presses, however, this changed when printing and publishing became specialised. Today, hardly any publisher owns a printing press.

There was a period in the late 1990s and early 2000s when publishing was going through a phase of reinventing itself. The digital age was dawning and the Internet was spreading its web. Since then Publishing has truly matured and there has never been a better time to explore this as a prime career option.

Look around you, do you know the web page you visit, the article you read, the ad that you love so much and even the product information you seek are all a form of publishing? There isn't an area of life that publishing doesn't touch and yet very few think about joining this industry.

It's true that when one thinks of a 'publisher' one tends to use it as a synonym for 'book publisher'. And that is where people confuse themselves. Publishing is about disseminating knowledge (content) and NOT just about putting out a book. There are many types of publishers but there are some common opportunities across all types of publishers.

Editor: There are about 16 definitions for this term. I am going to focus on the top 3 types of editors.

Commissioning/Acquisition Editor: This editor is the one responsible for acquiring content for a publishing house. At one time these were perhaps the most powerful individuals in a publishing house and their craft was hidden under many layers. There are just two basic traits one needs to be able to excel at this:

1. The first is a clear understanding of the publishing vision and or publishing priorities. Each publishing house has a clear focus area of publishing. It is the responsibility of the Commissioning/Acquisition Editor to ensure that every type of content clearly aligns with the focus area.
2. The second is commercial sense. A good editor knows where the content will sell, how much it will sell for and how much of it will sell. Yes it takes some time to develop this but in today's world, the learning can be fast tracked.

This is a front facing job where the person is expected to travel and meet with potential authors. It needs someone who is an extrovert, knowledgeable in a given subject area, articulate in the language one wants to commission in and the ability to be a sales person. No, he is not supposed to sell the content to the end consumer, he needs to sell the publishing house to the content creator and to sell the content to internal stakeholders within the publishing house.

POLICY INITIATIVES...

infrastructure. A pre-condition for the success of 'Make in India' is therefore investing in infrastructure.

Infrastructure: Beginnings of Success

Fortunately, infrastructure is one sector where some success is already visible. In the case of power the NDA government has been able to turn the situation around in several aspects. First, the government brought the country out of the coal impasse by successfully conducting coal auctions. This has made the coal allocation procedure transparent and the issue of coal shortages has been largely overcome. The ministry took an initiative to import natural gas to utilize some of existing unutilized capacity of gas-based plants. In many states, the problem has changed from that of supply-deficiency to demand-deficiency as many of the state electricity boards are not able to purchase power for shortage of funds. However, issues of unit costs, increasing the share of renewable energy in total energy supply, and the financial health of the state electricity boards will remain major problems calling for major structural solutions. Another success in the making in the context of infrastructure is transport. In the case of roads, the Ministry of Road Transport and Highways, has indicated that road construction has gone up to 13 km per day under the new government from 3 km per day during the last leg of the previous government. A number of new highway projects linking different parts of India as also using water transport as a means for low cost transportation of goods is being initiated. The main constraint in the expansion of this sector is the experience with the PPP model, which has run into considerable difficulties. Without private sector participation, finding resources for India's road sector needs would be a major constraint. Resources are also a major constraint for the expansion of the railways. The Ministry of Railways is working on two dedicated freight corridor projects on Eastern and Western routes, which will facilitate goods movement across major economic hubs and bring the cost down. The Ministry of Railways is also working on increasing the speed of 9 railway corridors from the existing 110 and 130 kmph to 160 and 200 kmph. For the period 2015-19, railways have come up with an investment plan of nearly Rs. 856 thousand crores. Without the backing of the resources, most of the initiatives of the new government will remain on paper. That is why the position of resources, in terms of the fiscal situation must be examined carefully.

The Fiscal Situation

The present government has had the opportunity to present two full year budgets since they assumed office. The budget numbers highlight that there is major resource crunch because of the low growth of tax revenues. Against a budgeted target of 17.7% growth in 2014-15, the actual growth in the central tax revenues has been only 9.3%. While central revenues have shown sluggish growth, as per the recommendations of the 14th

Finance Commission, a much larger share of the central taxes, amounting to 42%, will be transferred to the states from 2015-16, leaving much less for the central government to spend on plan projects or on investment. At the same time, in view of the need to maintain fiscal discipline, the government has shown commitment to adhere to the fiscal deficit reduction roadmap with only marginal adjustment. This has implied that capital and plan expenditure need to be cut down. The effect of this is already visible. Actual growth in central government expenditure in 2014-15 has only been 5.5%. Growth in plan expenditure was only 0.6% and capital expenditure actually fell in 2014-15. It has budgeted for a growth of expenditure for 2015-16 only at 5.6%. For the several initiatives and projects that have been planned by the central ministries under the new government, improving the resource situation is a pre-condition for success.

CAREERS IN...

Production Editor: this is the editor that takes over from where the commissioning editor acquires content. In smaller publishing houses the role of a Commissioning Editor is merged with that of a Production Editor. This type of editor coordinates the cleaning, structuring and finalizing content. He (she) is aware of the language styling and content structuring that works for the publishing house. There are two clear needs of excelling at this job and a third that is great to have.

1. A very good command of the language. Good production editors are fluent in the language they are working in. They need to have the ability to spot errors especially in areas such as titles, section headers etc. They need to communicate efficiently between the content creator and other types of content processors (such as language editors).

2. The second is the ability to multitask and manage schedules. "Time is money" is their mantra and every task they work on must be completed within an agreed timeframe. And there are always multiple projects running concurrently.

3. A third skill that works but isn't an absolute essential is diplomacy. Production editors typically handle lots of sensitive authors.

Copy editor: if you have a love for the language and the ability to spot errors, it is this sort of editor that is valued very highly. They have to have outstanding language skills especially written ones. The rest of the skills can be learnt.

Away from the editors are a host of jobs that are equally challenging.

Sales: With publishing changing the forms of delivering content, sales has now opened up possibilities like never before. Gone are the days when sales people had to haul backbreaking loads of books. Digital catalogues and computer data are today's tools needed to sell content. A bright person with a charming smile and a can do attitude will help make a great career in sales.

Marketing: Many people confuse sales with marketing and that is where the similarities end. Marketing is about highlighting the virtues of a product or series of products and placing these before the correct (target) audience. The Internet, online selling, web pages, social media, etc. require loads of targeted data. This is where design, branding and timing come together to produce marketing materials that drive sales.

While publishing is synonymous with publishers there is another universe that very few people are conscious about. This is the universe of service providers. While China became the manufacturing capital of the world, India quietly created a dominating position in knowledge processing. Today almost all types of global (English) content (static text, images, moving images, animation, web, etc.) flows through India. This industry hires more than 3 times the number of people all of publishing hires. So when you think about careers in publishing don't just think about books or magazines or journals, think about content, its structuring, cleaning and dissemination. While publishers do this directly, service providers do this indirectly. The result is a great rewarding and fulfilling career in Publishing.
