GREEN ENERGY INITIATIVES Powering India's Sustainable Development

K. R. Sudhaman

The global warming, air pollution and climate change are danger signals that all is not too well with environment and Modi government has rightly taken some major green initiatives for sustainable energy development during the last one year. Solar energy, which is abundantly available in the country is now being given a new thrust. The solar energy which accounted for mere one per cent of nearly two lakh Megawatt (MW) of power generated in the country, is being pursued with renewed vigour. The target of 20,000 MW of solar power proposed to be installed in the country has been reset by the NDA government to achieve five times more at one lakh MW of solar power by 2022. The target, which looked overambitious, now seems to be within the realms of reality with some states already witnessing silent revolution on rooftop solar power generation with the launch of net metering in the country.

The overall renewable energy share at the moment is around 6 per cent. Thermal power dominated, accounting for nearly 60 per cent of power generation. Wind power, which has already caught on in some parts of the country particularly, in the coastal region is proposed to be stepped up to 60,000 MW of power generation by 2022.

Though there are reports to suggest that U S President Barack Obama's visit to India this year pushed New Delhi to do more on promoting clean energy, Prime Minister Narendra Modi has repeatedly made it clear that his government's strong pitch for green energy is not to impress the world but for its own good both from environment and energy points of view.

Rightly, the government has embarked upon a programme to attract up to $200 billion investment in renewable energy in the next five-10 years to scale up solar power and wind power generation. According to

Minister of State for Power, Coal, New and Renewable Energy Piyush Goyal, the share of renewable sources of power is expected to more than double to over 15 per cent in the country's overall energy basket in about a decade.

This is achievable, experts say but at the same time they feel it is not going to be all that easy as lot of effort would be needed to scale up skill development and political resolve.

China, which had huge capacity for manufacture of solar photovoltaic cells, has stepped up skill development and has created enough manpower to install up to 20,000 MW of solar power annually. India at the moment lacked requisite manpower to scale up solar power generation. Technicians involved in wind energy are being retrained to handle solar power installations in view of the shortage. The existing trained manpower in the country can at the best install up to 2000 MW of solar power annually. So government will have to make concerted effort on this front as massive huge scaling up is required on skill development to achieve one lakh MW of solar power generation by 2022. The funding for green energy is no longer an issue as enough resources are available (both domestic and foreign). The question is that of harnessing these resources. The German Development Bank KfW has already committed to providing one billion Euros for setting up green transmission grid, particularly, in Tamil Nadu and Rajasthan for exclusive evacuation of Solar and wind power. The Indian government is in the process of negotiating yet another loan of one billion Euro to promote rooftop solar power generation.

At the recent global renewable energy investor's meet in New Delhi, as many as 293 companies, including NTPC, Suzlon, and Reliance Power, committed to setting up plants to generate 26,600 MW of renewable energy in 5 years, while the country's largest lender, State Bank of India (SBI) committed Rs 75,000 crore for generation of 15,000 MW of clean energy over a period of 5 years.

India is also working on building a consortium of 50 countries with abundant solar radiation, to pool research and technological advancements to improve its accessibility to the poor and in the remote areas.

Promotion of solar and wind power and biogas will also ensure that the fruits of development reach the common man. These renewable sources of energy will help government reach

Preparing for IAS GS (Mains) Paper IV Ethics, Integrity and Aptitude

S. B. Singh

Ethics as a subject of study sounds like an unfamiliar vocabulary to many aspiring candidates for the simple reason that this was never a part of their curriculum at school or college in most of the cases. But the hidden beauty of this paper is that even without any formal training in this subject, most of the candidates inculcate some or the other kind of ethical approach in their personal lives coming from the social environment in which they grow up.

At a very primary level, ethics can be defined as a system of moral principles affecting a person's decisions in his private and public life. Ethics deals with the language of right and wrong as also with the issues of good and bad. Once a person enters public life, these issues are confronted by him while he makes decisions that would impact our society. This lends rationale for including ethics in the GS Paper. A civil servant must be equipped with a moral map, a framework that he can use to find his way through difficult issues in his public life.

It would be very illustrative here to quote from the famous 'Nolan Principles' which gave its report to British Govt. in 1995 in the wake of the cash for questions controversy that dogged British political life in mid. 1995. The UK govt. appointed a committee headed by Nolan which recommended the following seven principles to be followed by elected and appointed public servants. These principles are:

1. Selflessness: Holders of public office should act solely in terms of public interest

2. Integrity: Holders of public office must avoid placing themselves under any obligation to people or organizations that might try to influence them in their work.

3. Objectivity: Holders of public office must act and take decisions impartially, fairly and on merit

4. Accountability: Holders of public office are accountable to public for their decisions and actions. They must be open to public scrutiny of their decisions.

5. Openness: Holders of public office should act and take decisions in open and transparent manner.

6. Honesty: Holders of public office must be truthful.

7. Leadership: Holders of public office must exhibit these principles in their own behavior.

The above mentioned seven principles of Nolan Committee provide a template for the conduct of a civil servant in India as well and the ethics paper, through theoretical as well case study based questions largely seeks to test these principles only.

If we go by the guidelines issued by UPSC on this paper of ethics, the paper is intended to test a candidate's attitude and approach to issues relating to integrity, probity in public life and his problem solving approach to various issues and conflicts faced by him in dealing with society. Under this objective, the syllabus of every nook and corner of the country, particularly, remote areas where grid connectivity is not there. Small solar and wind power generation provide the answer for off grid power generation particularly in remote areas where it is difficult to built transmission lines. Several diesel and electric pump sets used in farming are increasingly being converted into solar pump sets. Telecom towers, which had diesel generator sets as back up due to erratic power supply in most parts of the country, too are switching over to solar power in view of very high cost of diesel power. Diesel power costs over Rs 15 per unit as against Rs 6-8 per unit of solar power. Also the problem with diesel power is pilferage of diesel for use in transport. This raised the generation cost further by Rs 2-3 per unit of electricity, experts said. There is yet another advantage of solar power is that there is hardly any maintenance cost and photo-voltaic cells lasts for nearly 25 years. The only maintenance required is periodical cleaning. The cost of electricity from solar photo-voltaic cells is coming down drastically. At one point of time, it was as high as Rs 20 per unit some. In recent year it has almost reached grid parity and it is expected to come down further in the face of massive R&D work going on, all over the world. Also costs of coal is increasing year after year, particularly that of imported coal, thereby, raising the cost of thermal power. Recently new solar photo-voltaic cells have been developed, which can convert 40 per cent of solar light falling on it to electricity as against the present ones which convert only 25 per cent. Experts say now new transparent solar photo voltaic cells have been developed unlike the traditional opaque ones. The transparent ones can be used as window panes in the buildings apart from rooftops. With solar power costs coming down, there is a possibility of solar power generation becoming very attractive in near future. There is also proposal to set up hybrid energy parks in areas with abundant sun radiation as well as wind potential to save on transmission and power evacuation infrastructure cost. Several multinational companies have evinced interest in domestic manufacture of renewable energy equipment and this is expected to attract sizeable foreign investment in view of increasing demand. This also had tremendous job potential. Solar water pumps will reduce input costs for farmers. Micro-irrigation also helps in conserving water apart from increasing crop yield. The introduction of net metering is bringing about sea change in roof top solar power generation in many states particularly in major cities and rural housing for poor. Generating 1-2 kw of power in every roof top of small houses and up to one MW in large high rise buildings has now become a reality. Several states like Maharashtra, Haryana, Tamil Nadu, Gujarat, Karnataka and Delhi have brought about legislative changes for roof top solar power through net metering. The advantage of net metering concept is that there is no need for batteries for storage of solar power produced in the day time for consumption in the night. Batteries are an expensive affair, and it raise the cost of solar power generation by at least 50 per cent. Lately, the United States of America and Japan have developed cheaper, lighter, long lasting less expensive lithium batteries. The net metering concept has ensured that one lakh MW of solar power generation will not be very difficult to achieve. There are indications that at least 40 per cent i.e. 40,000 MW of solar power generation is likely to come from roof top solar power systems in the country.

The net metering based rooftop solar projects facilitates the self-consumption of electricity generated by the rooftop project and allows for feeding the surplus into the network of the distribution licensee. Net metering is a bi-directional energy meter capable of registering both import and export of electricity. This net generation is then credited to the owner's account and adjusted subsequently against the electricity consumed from the grid.

An ordinary middle class family by installing 2 KW rooftop solar PV power equipment costing around Rs one lakh on the roof of its house, can save Rs 1100-1500 on its monthly electricity bill. Rooftop solar power equipment lasts for 25 years and there is no recurring or maintenance cost. The investment on roof-top solar power can be recovered in 4-5 years.

This is a win-win situation both for the power distribution companies as well as individuals as it takes care of the power deficit during peak hours in a city. The individuals benefit due to reduced electricity bills.

A city like Delhi has about 250-300 sunny days available. Delhi with more than 700 Square Kilometer of built-up area for the installation of solar photovoltaic systems can generate at least 2,500 to 3000 MW of roof top solar power, which is almost one third of the 6000 MW of power consumed on an average. The six metros alone in the country have the potential to install 10000-12000 MW of rooftop solar power in the next four to five years because of the huge cost benefit.

Setting up large solar power projects like the one being set up in Rajasthan, Madhya Pradesh, Gujarat and Andhra Pradesh of 500-1000 MW capacity is fraught with several dangers like line losses, evacuation problem, huge investments in transmission lines, transmission and distribution losses including theft.

Tamil Nadu has already constructed three lakh rural houses for the poor with rooftop solar power. This is expected to be replicated in the entire country with Modi government embarking upon housing for all by 2022. Solar power is likely to bring down costs of low-cost housing.

India receives solar energy equivalent to about 500 trillion KWH per annum, more than enough to provide for the entire country's needs. India produces around two lakh MW of power and one fourth of Rajasthan, Thar desert, is enough generate much of solar power. There is abundant waste land in the country, which could be utilized for setting up large solar plants. A one MW of solar power generation requires 4-5 acres of land Gujarat tops the list of solar power generation with over 600 MW followed by Rajasthan with over 500 MW. Madhya Pradesh and Andhra Pradesh are too catching up now with these huge, solar power plants.

Preparing for IAS...

ethics is broken into the following areas:

- Ethics and Human Interface: It deals with dimensions of ethics, human values, role of social agencies in inculcating values in an individual
- Attitude: It deals with moral and political attitude
- Aptitude: It deals with the foundational values of civil services viz; integrity, impartiality, tolerance, compassion etc.
- Emotional Intelligence: It chiefly deals with using emotional information to guide one's thinking and behaviour.
- Contributions of moral thinkers and philosophers from India and abroad
- Ethics in Public Administration
- Probity in governance

It is easy to perceive the syllabus of ethics in terms of the topics enumerated above. The syllabus, in the main, comprises two aspects. One, the theoretical foundations of ethics and two, the application of ethics in a given situation in public life. For the theoretical part, what one needs to know is the meaning of ethics, its utility in public life and various branches of ethics. Just consulting Wikipedia will be sufficient to cover this part. Then, one has to understand terms like attitude, aptitude, emotional intelligence, value, integrity etc. Again, some basic information about all these terms can be had from various sites on net. I would also suggest consulting www.bbc.uk/ethics/guide for information on ethics and its main constituents. Some of the topics on ethics directly relate to public administration. For example, probity in governance and related issues like code of conduct, RTI, citizens charter etc. Hence, it would be wise to cover these topics from any standard text book on public administration. However, the most vital aspect of preparing for the ethics paper is self observation. By this, I imply that a candidate must get into the habit of assessing issues of public importance from ethical angle and formulate his own stand. To cite some examples, take the issues of abortion, euthanasia, homosexuality etc. and form your own ethical stand on these issues. This will give you a real time practice of case studies. It must be developed as an enduring habit. Besides, various scams, controversies, grafts within the govt. are reported frequently in newspapers and electronic media. These can serve as day to day case study for practice. What is required is to grasp these issues, formulate questions by yourself and then answer those questions. If you can get your answers evaluated by an available mentor, it will give you a proper feedback also.

Thus, the nature of the ethics paper being what it is, it is only natural that a commonsensical approach is adopted rather than an academic approach which is not at all required in this exam. It is worthwhile to remind here that one must know about the standpoints of our moral and religious philosophers as well as national leaders. For instance, The ethical outlook of King Ashoka, Statesman Chanakya, Emperor Akbar, political leader Mahatma Gandhi and many more leaders must be comprehended. Similarly, the ethical dimensions of Hinduism, Islam, Buddhism, Jainism, Christianity need to be understood.

As for western philosophers, covering Aristotle, Plato, Socrates, Hegel, John Stuart Mill is a must. These philosophers have set the tone and tenor of western philosophy. The caution to be taken while reading Indian and Western philosophers is that there is no need to delve deep into their philosophical postulates because, first, it is not easy to comprehend them at deeper level and secondly, it is not required within the scope of UPSC syllabus at all. All that is needed is a layman's approach while studying these philosophers.

The key to commanding the ethics paper lies, thus, in understanding its purpose first and then finding a commonsensical way of doing it without attempting any specialization. At many places of learning for UPSC exam, ethics is being unnecessarily treated as a specialized discipline and too much is being read into the syllabus. One must guard against such wrong approach and keep one's preparation within the scope of UPSC objective i.e. to display some ethical traits in your answers rather than showing punditry over it! Recommended Book List

1. C. L. Wayer: Western Political Thought (This will help in covering western moral thinkers)
2. V.P. Verma: Modern Indian Political Thought (for covering modern Indian thinkers)
3. Publications Division: Our sages and philosophers of ancient India.
4. William K. Frankena : Ethics
5. IGNOU Booklets on Ethics
6. Fourth Report of Second Administrative Reform Commission: Ethics and governance
7. For Ethics case studies: Santa Clara University website on ethics
