SMART CITIES TRANSFORMING URBAN INDIA

Dr. Ranjeet Mehta

Smart cities are a hot topic and a commonly used buzzword today. This concept primarily involves combination of human capital and technology to create a sustainable environment. Such cities work towards improving sustainable economic development, infrastructure and also create a higher quality of life for the citizens as they contribute to this process. With increasing urbanization, India's urban population is expected to increase to 600 million people by the year 2031. This number is almost twice the urban population in 2001. Almost 50% percent of the total population will live in urban areas. According to a recent report on Indian urban infrastructure and services by a high-powered expert committee set by the Indian government, the urban share of the GDP is expected to rise to 75% in the year 2030 from around 62-63 percent in the year 2009-2010. It is for this reason that cities are referred to as the "engines of economic growth". It is essential to ensure that they function as efficient engines as these are critical to our economic development. This trend of urbanization that is seen in India over the last few decades will continue for some more time.

The working population in the year 2035 will constitute about 69% of the total population. Urban areas will be critical to the economic growth of the country and they will require a massive overhaul to accommodate the future population. To cater to this increasing urban population, in the future, cities need to plan and provide a suitable environment for future investments, create new jobs and livelihoods, build reliable public infrastructure, provide social services with ample access to affordable housing and most importantly support efficient use of resources for a sustainable quality of life. This dramatic growth also provides impetus for the creation of smart cities which leverage information and communications technology (ICT) to greatly improve the productivity, lifestyle and the prosperity of our people. Additionally, green growth strategies can build environmentally sustainable cities.

On June 25th this year the Prime Minister, Mr Narendra Modi, launched three major urban development initiatives: AMRUT (Atal Mission for Rejuvenation and Urban Transformation); Smart Cities Mission; and Housing for All

(Urban), at Vigyan Bhawan in New Delhi unveiling the roadmap for developing 100 smart cities and 500 AMRUT cities over the next five years and 20 million houses for urban poor by 2022. The Prime Minister explained that for the first time in India, a challenge was being floated, in which the citizens of urban India could contribute in the formulation of development visions of their cities. Those cities which were able to competitively meet the required parameters would be developed as smart cities. Hence, the Prime Minister said, this competitive mechanism would end the top-down approach, and lead to people-centric urban development. He gave a simple vision of a smart city, as one which was a step or two ahead of people's aspirations. Technology, transportation, energy efficiency, walk-to-work, cycling etc were some elements mentioned by Mr Modi. A smart city uses digital technologies or information and communication technologies (ICT) to enhance quality and performance of urban services, to reduce costs and resource consumption, and to engage more effectively and actively with its citizens. Sectors that have been developing smart city technology include management government services, transport and traffic management, energy, health care, water and waste management. Smart city applications are developed with the goal of improving the management of urban flows and allowing for real time responses to challenges. A smart city may, therefore, be more prepared to respond to challenges than one with a simple 'transactional' relationship with its citizens. Major technological, economic and environmental changes have generated interest in smart cities, including climate change, economic restructuring,

CAREER OPPORTUNITIES IN MICROFINANCE SECTOR

Richa Mitra

"If you give a man a fish, you feed him for a day...but if you teach a man to fish, you give him food for lifetime."

Poor in a country like India, already know how to fish, what they need is a little capital to buy a boat and a net. This inspiration is behind the emergence of a revolutionary financial model called Microfinance, which is meant to provide microcredit to poor in the form of loans and insurance in order to provide them an opportunity to earn their own livelihood, in view of their inability to seek formal financial assistance from the established financial institutions like banks.

Success of this microcredit model not only led to flourishing of many Microfinance Institutions (MFI) and its different models, but also the entry and active participation of many banks to capitalize on the profit potential at the bottom of the pyramid. The competition cum collaboration between the social investor and commercial investor has clearly created plethora of opportunities in terms of jobs both for graduates as well professionals.

The sector needs personnel from various educational and experience backgrounds to serve in an organization at various levels in MFI's such as operations, finance, human resources, internal audit, and corporate communications. More than any other function, mostly the job opportunities arise in the operations area, where an individual is required to move among the different Self Help Groups (SHG's), understand their finance needs, and then disburse the amount of loan they required after completing all the documentation.

Microfinance institutions are transitioning from their status as non-governmental organizations to regulated financial institutions in order to make their business model more sustainable. The talent and succession issue is important. These institutions offer new services and they have to increase the level of professionalism in their organizations. Some prominent names in the sector are Bandhan (www.bandhanmf.com), SKS Microfinance (www.sksindia.com), Equitas (www.equitasmf.in), Ujjivan Financial Services (www.ujjivan.com), Arth Microfinance (www.arthmicrofinance.com).

The jobs in microfinance sector are primarily focused on lending credit to poor households involving primarily women so that they can be made self reliant. The individuals having penchant for social service and rural development are highly desired. The jobs are primarily analytical in nature which also ask for excellent interpersonal communication in English, Hindi and local language of the allotted location. Moreover, candidates are required to keep themselves updated with the changes that are taking place in the environment they are working in, which again calls for above average intellectual inputs.

In core operations area, an individual can start from a position of Credit Officer and can move upto the level of Regional manager or Director, Operations. The salaries at the entry level positions range from Rs 10, 000 to Rs 15, 000 as credit officer, which can increase upto a salary level of Rs 45, 000 to 50, 000 in the middle management and may range to Rs 80, 000 in the senior level positions.

Various career opportunities in the field of Microfinance are as under:

Loan/Credit Officer: The job of Loan/Credit officer is to verify and process loan applications and recommend these for approval to branch manager; Disburse loan and verify end-utilization of loan; Attend client group meetings, collect, and record loan recoveries, ensure proper and timely recovery of loans, follow-up of overdue to ensure regularization, to look after account and entry through branch software and to handle banking transactions.

The qualification for this post is graduate or Higher Secondary; (Age 18 to 30 years); Fluency in local language is

e-commerce and entertainment. Smart cities can be broadly classified into three types:

- (1) New cities,
- (2) Retrofitting existing cities with smart technologies, and
- (3) Purpose-driven cities. New cities integrate ICT in all aspects to attract citizens and businesses by providing quality services.

Retrofitting existing cities into smart cities is a step-by-step intervention to integrate new processes into the older systems to achieve the overall objective of creating a smart city. Purpose driven cities could be industry centric, built around science towns or other core activities. The scale of each of these type of cities could greatly vary. However, all the smart cities broadly consist of ICT integrated projects implemented that cater to components: like Energy, Transportation, Smart Buildings, Governance and Social Infrastructure

ICT (information and communication technology) forms the fundamental support system for smart cities and it is integrated across different sectors to achieve transparency and efficiency in processes. It can be used to improve power use and distribution, ensure 24/7 water supply, improve efficiency in mobility through intelligent transportation and traffic management, enhance automated surveillance and security systems and enable Wi-Fi powered open spaces and houses for business. It can also improve the efficient use of scarce resources and allow real-time tracking of available services. It has the potential to provide quick response in emergencies as well. The scope of integrating ICT is unlimited and it is largely dependent on availability of funds and the set goals and objectives for different cities.

Smart cities take measures to plan for future generations while protecting the natural environment and resources to reduce the overall carbon footprint. Some of the major agendas can include:

- Use of Renewable Resources: Smart urban environments require renewable sources of power to reduce dependency on coal for energy generation.
- Promoting mixed-use developments and encouraging walkability: Smart cities include walkable communities where most major trips could be completed within a short distance through walking, cycling or public transportation with reduced trip transfers.
- Reduction in wastage of resources: Through the use of ICT, smart cities focus on reducing wastage of resources such as water, electricity, etc. by identifying and isolating the source

Efficient energy management is crucial to a smart city due to its large dependence on power. Smart metering, cloud computing and wireless connected sensors are some of the technologies that have been adopted for energy management. Smart meters allow two-way monitoring from both the utility providers as well as the end-user to monitor consumption, peak hour loads, etc.

These systems provide necessary information to the citizens to help better manage their plan tariffs.

Additionally, smart cities also use 'smart grids,' which are power grids that are integrated with controls, automation and new technologies to allow efficient transmission of power, quicker restoration of power on outages or other incidences, reduce overall operation and management costs and integrate renewable energy systems. In addition to this, they give financial incentives for the consumers to shift the electrical demand during off-peak hours. Overall, smart grids offer opportunities to save energy while reducing dependency on fossil fuels.

Smart cities provide seamless integrated public transportation networks across multiple modes including rail, metro, bus and non-motorized transportation (walking and cycling). Ideally, ICT is integrated with the transport networks to allow real time tracking and increase citizen access to information on transportation. Guided parking and volume-based traffic control systems aid in addressing traffic challenges and improve mobility.

India has 50 cities with more than a million people. Job creation needs new cities because it will replace the current short-term thinking of taking people to jobs with a more sustainable solution of taking jobs to people. There will be strong regional disparities in the next 20 years; five states in the South and West of India (Gujarat, Maharashtra, Tamil Nadu, Karnataka and Andhra Pradesh) will see 50% of the country's GDP growth but only 5% of population growth. We must define urbanisation carefully; it is not about relocating more people into the larger cities nor is it about well-planned economic wastelands like Chandigarh. We have seen emergence of small pockets of economic success in areas like Gurgaon near Delhi, Gachibowli near Hyderabad, Magarpatta near Pune, Whitefield in Bangalore and Mohali near Chandigarh, but these are from far being identified as smart cities.

Industrial corridors between India's big metropolises like the Delhi-Mumbai Industrial Corridor, the Chennai-Bangalore Industrial Corridor and the Bangalore-Mumbai Economic Corridor seem a positive move. It is hoped that many industrial and commercial centres will be recreated as 'smart cities' along these belts. The Delhi-Mumbai Industrial Corridor (DMIC), which is spread across six states, seeks to create seven new smart cities as the nodes of the corridor in its first phase. The very idea of smart cities is based on the assumption that there are technocratic solutions for the routine problems that citizen face. Problems of inefficiency that are seen to dominate the old bureaucratic-political order are hence given a 'smart' solution by employing 'Big Data'. Another positive impact of the 'Smart Cities' is job creation, which will be, needless to say, 'Smart'. While it is difficult to give an estimate of jobs that will be generated and the reduction in labour migration, one can confidently say that even if work begins on 10-15 smart cities over the next one year, we would have created a favourable ecosystem for many thousands of jobs. This will create jobs for all but may be more inclined towards white-collar jobs as IT professionals will be in greater demand; IT infrastructure being the backbone of any smart city. Data analytics, programming, high-end consulting, system and network integration will be the order of the day and professionals and students in this area can expect better opportunities. It is a great time and opportunity for the 'Internet of Things', as they call it. With a burgeoning urban population, there is an immediate need for creation of infrastructure facilities to satisfy the increasing urbane aspirations of our populace and smart cities seem to be the solution. While the focus seems to have shifted towards smart cities and urbanisation, care must be taken so as to ensure the large percentage of population that relies on unskilled jobs and agriculture are not left behind.
