

ECONOMY WILL GET BACK TO 8 PER CENT GROWTH

PM asks India Inc to shed pessimism

"I propose to strike a contrarian note again. If the business mood was unduly optimistic in 2007 I think it is unduly pessimistic today. Naturally, I welcome the re-discovery of govt's importance by industry. We are seeing a temporary downturn, which does happen"

—Manmohan Singh
Prime Minister

The Prime Minister, Mr. Manmohan Singh has asked corporate India to shed its sense of pessimism and be optimistic about the future growth prospects of the economy. He assured industry that the economy would get back to 8 per cent growth trajectory in the near future.

Inaugurating the annual general meeting & national conference 2013 of the Confederation of Indian Industry (CII) in New Delhi. Mr. Singh said the pessimism in business sentiments was unwarranted by ground level realities. "I would urge Indian industry to have faith in our determination and avoid getting swamped by negativism. One of the advantages of being a democracy is that our shortcomings and deficiencies are always put before us. And there are indeed many deficiencies. Corruption is a problem. Bureaucratic inertia is a problem. Managing coalitions is not easy. But these problems have not arisen suddenly. They were all even earlier, when the economy was growing at 8 per cent," he added. Singh's comments came at a time when India's economic growth crawled to a decade-low of five per cent and the macro parameters haven't shown any sign of a quick recovery. The PM has, however, recognized that the government should help improve the environment for business.

On the growth prospects of the future, the Prime Minister said, "I do not believe our future growth is 5 per cent growth. We grew at an average of about 8 per cent in the last ten years and we can get there again. But this calls for speedy and decisive government action." He also recapped his address at the CII AGM some seven years back(2007), when also he took a different view on the state of the economy, when everything seemed to be going exceptionally well. That time, he cautioned industry to be more calibrated and cautious in their responses to the prevailing upbeat mood of the economy.

Singh conceded that the government had to ensure macroeconomic stability by lowering the Centre's fiscal deficit, reducing record current account deficit(CAD) and inflation, and speedily clearing of projects to steer the economy to eight per cent growth path. The Prime Minister also sought to prepare the country for low exports and higher CAD till the global economy stabilized. "We have to accept that our exports will be weak and our CAD higher than it should be. We have to learn to cope with these problems."

Mr. Singh observed that the prime mover of the Indian economy was the private sector, accounting for 75 per cent of the investment. "Prime sector needs an environment in which enterprises can flourish and create both jobs and growth". He added, "The environment today is not what it should be and that is what the government should correct." Conceding that part of the problem is due, to a global slowdown, the Prime Minister asserted that India's growth figures are more impressive than countries like Brazil, Russia, Japan and South Africa. Mr. Singh highlighted the steps taken by the government for restoration of macro-economic balance as a step towards higher growth. Applying tight leash on fiscal deficit, rationalizing fuel subsidies, containing current account deficit, moderating inflation, etc., are some of the steps.

DEBATES ON NCTC, ITS UTILITY AND UNFORTUNATE CONTROVERSIES

—V. Balachandran, I.P.S (retd)

INTRODUCTION- WHAT IS INTELLIGENCE?

To understand why we need an organization like NCTC (National Counter-Terrorism Centre) it will be necessary to know why we need "Intelligence" in governance. Apart from the armed forces and police departments, the next important role to guard our national security is played by Central and State intelligence agencies who work as watchdogs of our government to detect internal unrest, subversion, communal strife, foreign aggression, terrorism (sponsored from abroad or within) and several other threats. Intelligence is not mere collection of information. It is a long and tedious process of bare facts becoming policy inputs through different stages- collection of facts, their analysis, quick and clear evaluation, dissemination of intelligence assessments to the policy makers for quick decisions. Intelligence is collected on external aggression, terrorism, economic destabilizacountries, espionage and a host of other factors. In addition to this the regulating departments perform their own watch dog role by their own methods of collecting information. For example the SEBI is charged with the responsibility of keeping watch on stock markets to prevent manipulation. Similarly the Reserve Bank and Ministry of Finance are supposed to keep close watch on all factors affecting economic security. Also, the police in different states are supposed to keep close watch on the criminals and the "Underworld" who use their influence to spread their criminal activities to undermine our security. Terrorists often use criminals' facilities for their operations. The serial Bombay blasts in 1992-93 are an instance. Intelligence is of two types- "current intelligence" (what happens around us) and "estimative intelligence" (what is likely to happen). Current intelligence or "Tactical intelligence" is usually "law and order oriented intelligence" or "battle duration intelligence but time-sensitive, meaning that it has to be acted upon quickly. At the district or State level, bare facts (what is called raw intelligence) are presented by the District or State intelligence organizations leaving the onus of quick assessment and decision making to the local senior officials on labour agitation, communal riots, agrarian crisis, crime or even terrorism from local groups. In all such cases the political masters expect intelligence agencies to compete with news channels in delivering quick information. Similar is the case with "battle intelligence". "Estimative intelligence" which can also be called "strategic intelligence" is a long term projection of trends which, like a jigsaw puzzle, is often difficult as inputs or trends might come from different sources both domestic and foreign, thereby testing the competence of the analysts to piece together to form the picture on a strategic canvas. These can be on military ism, cyber, economic or commercial warfare against us. How do we collect intelligence? Open and clandestine sources feed intelligence. It is often found that 90% of what we need to know, even military intelligence is available openly if one cares to read. But it is the secret 10% that has to be dug out by national intelligence agencies through what is called "clandestine" operations which is crucial to plug the missing gaps. Open sources are media including technical journals, diplomatic contacts, trade, war games and air shows. Clandestine sources are HUMINT (spies), SIGINT (Signal intelligence), IMINT (Imagery intelligence) and MASINT (measurement and signature intelligence). With the internet and electronic communication revolution, this area has become a good source of intelligence although terrorists do not use that medium for fear of interception.

Employment News Web Exclusives

Employment News has launched a new section "Web Exclusives", on its website <http://www.employmentnews.gov.in/>. During 13-19 April 2013, "Landmark Verdict

Calligraphy is one of the ancient professions, which finds several patrons even today. In the modern days, calligraphy is used for a variety of purposes and appears on a variety of mediums. And through its diversity, it provides a wide range of opportunities to calligraphists. To understand how, we should first understand what calligraphy is.

The dictionary meaning of calligraphy is 'the art of good writing.' However, for professional calligraphists, calligraphy is much beyond good writing; each of them has his own meaning, understanding and definition of calligraphy. Some say it is forming and arranging symbols in beautiful way. For some, it is a form of expression. Some others see it as just a profession. Still others say that it is their way of meditation!

Calligraphy is the skill of discovering the art hidden in our scripts. So scripts are fundamental to calligraphy. But calligraphy, to some extent can be independent of scripts. Calligraphists, sometimes, create artistic strokes that may or may not resemble letters. Tools used in Calligraphy are traditional Boru, Calligraphy pens / nibs (which are different for Devnagri and English) pens, cut tip markers, art brushes, foam rollers, etc.

Calligraphy of the olden days reflects in religious texts, edicts, sagas and records of events that appear on mediums like walls, ceiling, stones, palm leaves and animal bones found after excavations. In the modern world, calligraphy is an art that is applied to a number of purposes, based on the approach, requirement and mood of the calligraphist. It now appears on mediums like cloth, wood, plastic, porcelain and even human body.

Opportunities

Calligraphy can be found on almost everything -decorative pieces, home furnishings, sculptures, paintings, drapes, wall decors, and so on. Some popular commercial applications of calligraphy include wedding cards, greeting cards, invitations, business cards, menus, certificates, announcements, logos, monogram, posters and books. Some more innovates applications in the recent years have been garments, watches, purses, jewellery, interiors and tattoos. Calligraphists do a wonderful job by beautifying objects by just ornamenting letters. Some calligraphists have gone further to experiment on fusing calligraphy with performing arts like song and dance!

Calligraphists can work as artists with interior designing firms, body painting studios, or event organisers. Or, they can work with makers of products and embellish the products with calligraphy. Practising calligraphy as independent professionals and meeting the diverse requirements of clients, whether it is painting a letter of the alphabet on a coffee mug, creating beautifully lettered artwork or making greeting cards is another option.

Calligraphy can be pursued part-time. It can be applied to any other regular full-time job to enhance performance and output. Propagating art by conducting calligraphy classes and workshops is also a promising career option.

With the advent of computers, calligraphy became an integral part of fields like design, graphics and typography. Font design, desktop wall papers, hoarding design, signboards, packaging design, illustrations, and moving images for films, television and advertisements use calligraphy for computer-based variations also.

Skills

The skills required to master calligraphy are partially innate; remaining can be acquired through practice. Calligraphy requires an artistic bent of mind, passion to gain insight to the meaning letters convey, a steady hand, an eye for detail and a vivid imagination. Aesthetic sense and gauge of artistic balance are imperative. The endeavour to learn calligraphy demands patience and perseverance.

Training

There are a plethora of institutes offering calligraphy courses. These courses span a few days to a few months. However, there are hardly any university-recognised courses for this subject.

A typical course will acquaint the student with the basics of calligraphy. Some institutes provide guest lectures, workshops and educational excursions also. Advanced courses delve deep into the subject. These courses are usually reasonably priced. Initial investments are moderate and promise ample returns in terms of skills and knowledge acquired.

A class of the calligraphy constitutes students from schools and colleges, employees, and professionals like doctors and engineers, homemakers, and even retired individuals.

Some institutes offer calligraphy courses in the online and distance learning modes. The modules are easy of access. Demonstrations too are available for download. Institutes assess the work of students by reviewing the scanned copies of the work. However, some calligraphists advise against learning calligraphy in online and distance modes. They believe that it is a highly structured, methodical and scientifically evolved process that needs constant supervision. Some even advise on working under a master for some time to gain expertise in the art. They believe that this method provides a wide scope for learning and fuels imagination of students.

For those who want to pursue calligraphy as hobby, there are institutes that offer weekend and summer courses.

Remuneration

Calligraphy has been proven to have a high commercial quotient. Starting salaries of calligraphists can be around Rs. 15,000. For independent calligraphists the pay depends on their expertise, experience, and past work record, and project on hand, which can be a few lakhs also.

The government has called for the rapid implementation of a series of measures including fast-tracking job cards for widowed and destitute women in villages and providing worksite facilities such as crèches to improve women's participation in the Mahatma Gandhi National Rural Employment Guarantee Scheme. MGNREGS has millions of workers on its rolls but women's participation remains uneven across states, within states and sometimes even within districts. Analysts say that through proper implementation the employment programme can make a positive impact on the economic and social well being of the poor and rural women. In its design, MGNREGS provides women the opportunity to earn equal wages as men, and narrow the gender gap in income, which at present is roughly 30% across the country.

Rural Development Minister, Mr. Jairam Ramesh wrote to all chief ministers outlining several measures including providing drinking water and resting areas. Many of these measures are already enshrined in the Act and its rules and regulations, but their implementation varies across the country. Stressing that the state governments have the "primary responsibility" to implement the rural employment programme, Mr. Ramesh wrote that the Central government stands prepared to extend whatever assistance that you may require.

This is part of a larger effort to address the question of women's participation and empowerment. In early December, as part of an effort to improve women's participation, the minister had asked chief ministers to take proactive steps to set up individual post office and bank accounts for women enrolled in the scheme. A January 2012 study about, MGNREGS Implementation: A Cross-State Comparison, by the Woodrow Wilson School's Graduate Policy Workshop found that the all India average for women workers in the programme was 42%. The study found that in states like Tamil Nadu women accounted for 82%, while Uttar Pradesh "has yet to meet the one-third female participation requirement, as stipulated under Article 29 of the Act".

The January 2011 Centre for Social Protection research report, India's National Rural Employment Guarantee Act: women's participation and impacts in Himachal Pradesh, Kerala and Rajasthan by Ratna M Sudarshan tracks changes in women's participation in the programme between 2006-07 and 2009-10.

In 2006-07, the number of states with 33% or more of women workers was 15, this increased to 20 in 2009-10. In this period, there has been a general upward trend in the total volume of work generated and the share of women in work days, though there are exceptions. In Gujarat, Karnataka, Manipur, Jharkhand, Punjab, Assam and Arunachal Pradesh the total women work days increased, though there was a decline in their share of person days. In Odisha, there was a decline in the women's work days but their share in the labour force held steady.

To ensure that more women benefit from the programme, the minister has mooted setting aside "special works that require less efforts and those that are close to their houses" for pregnant women and those with infants. Providing crèches is another of the measures that Mr. Ramesh has highlighted. There is already a requirement that crèches be provided at the worksite, but in many states, (Sudarshan's study highlights Rajasthan), there is little by way of childcare provisions.

Women point out to that fact there was no child care giver and children were left unattended, and that there were insufficient cradles or these had gone missing. In Rajasthan, women managed to combine work and child care by relying on family members, sometimes husbands and more often than not older daughters, who may be around the age of 10 to 12 years. This of course means that these girls have to be kept out of school, and initiating yet another cycle of poverty and subsistence living. In Kerala and Himachal Pradesh, younger women who were likely to have young children were not participating in the programme due to absence of child care facilities. This situation could be addressed to some extent through the recent initiative of including the construction of anganwadis in the portfolio of MGNREGS works.

Mr. Ramesh has also asked state governments to ensure that women account for 50% of supervisors at each worksite. "Priority should be given to women workers who have put in maximum work in the last three years or their daughters. Within this, priority may be given to disabled women," he wrote. States have also been asked to conduct time and motion studies to formulate gender, age, level of disability, terrain and climate sensitive schedule of rates. The ministry has asked that state governments to ensure that the work done by women is accurately recorded.

Mr. Ramesh has suggested that women's groups and self-help groups (SHGs) be encouraged to participate in awareness generation, capturing demand and planning, besides implementation and monitoring of works taken up under MGNREGA. Empirical studies reveal that the SHGs have helped in making MGNREGA more accessible to women.

The Princeton study found that the involvement of self help groups in Tamil Nadu helped women to make demands for MGNREGA in a "single, unified voice". Sudarshan's study found that in Kerala, the state government's decision to make the Kudumbashree or women's self help groups in charge of managing the rural employment programme has resulted in consolidating women's position in the scheme.

Sudarshan's study found that while there was nothing like the Kudumbashree in Rajasthan, the tradition of paid labour for women and the presence of active youth groups and other grassroots level civil society organizations around other social issues such as the Right to Information contributed to the high level of women's participation in MGNREGS. The Mahila Mandals in Himachal Pradesh are not involved in the MGNREGS, this is because it is mostly the migrant population that is making use of the rural employment scheme. Women from migrant population groups are less likely to be members of the Mahila mandals.

The government would like the experience of the SHGs in the southern states to be replicated across the country as the active participation by the SHGs helped ensure fair compensation and served an important role in programme monitoring. However, this will require the strengthening of SHGs especially through access to credit in other part of the country, especially in the northern states.

The presence of more women at MGNREGA worksites than in the overall workforce in states like Kerala and Rajasthan is indicative of the latent demand for work among women. The convenience that the worksite is not located at long distances from home, and availability of work are factors that have aided the high participation of women. These two factors, in states like Rajasthan, trumped the fact that wages in the rural employment programme were found to be lower than the minimum wage. In Kerala on the other hand, the MGNREGA wage for women, which Sudarshan's study puts at Rs 125, was more than the prevalent market wage of Rs 70 to Rs 80 for women, but less than the Rs 200 that the market rate for men. For women in Kerala, the MGNREGS provided another added impetus. This higher wage rate could also be attributed to the role of the SHGs in implementing the rural employment programme.

Mr. Ramesh has asked the state governments to identify and fast track job cards for widowed, deserted, and destitute women and to ensure that they get the mandated 100 days of work. Studies show that poor and single earner women prefer daily wage work even though it may pay less or be more backbreaking because they get the money at the end of the day while MGNREGS provides for monthly wages. Ensuring better flow of money, without delays, could improve the participation of women from this particularly vulnerable group in the programme.

I am taking into consideration only security intelligence collected by Central agencies and not crime or law & order intelligence which is usually produced by state Police. Security intelligence is collected on a parallel track by major central agencies like Intelligence Bureau (IB), External Intelligence (R&AW), military intelligence, Customs, Enforcement Directorate, and Para-military outfits. After 9/11 terrorist attack was investigated, it was said that nearly 100 different departments, not only intelligence outfits, including private security groups contributed to US national security. Efforts were made to tap them for participating in terror intelligence collection. Most of the "intelligence reforms" in USA and UK were in that direction. As against this we in India have not taken private groups into confidence for participating in intelligence collection although a similar situation is emerging here too with more and more private groups managing airports, communications and road transport.

HOW IS INTELLIGENCE PROCESSED & ACTED UPON?

Information available with any odd organization would assume importance and become actionable only if conveyed immediately to the concerned service for further action. If they keep it with them it is of no use. Also, the department receiving the information has to initiate prompt action. This did not happen prior to 9/11. The US 9/11 National Commission, which enquired into 9/11 attack, found such failures on the part of CIA and FBI in sharing and coordinating information. They also found the sharing and coordination even within an organization lacking. Sometimes absence of vertical or horizontal dialogue within an organization leads to failure in taking cognizance of inputs as seen with FBI which ignored the "Williams Alert Memo" of July 2001 from field station about suspected Middle Eastern students getting training in flying. Stev Coll in his monumental work "Ghost Wars" quotes at least 3 occasions lected to take preemptive measures against Osama bin Laden despite strong appeal from CIA. The Bush-1 Administration did no better prior to 9/11. That is where intelligence coordination is necessary.

When the office of Director, Central Intelligence (DCI) was created by an Act in 1947 it was meant to be a coordinator over the existing US intelligence agencies, including CIA. He wore 2 hats: DCI and Director CIA. Gradually this role was diluted, other agencies grew stronger under different Cabinet level Secretaries and DCI remained content with only clearing intelligence budgets. As security situation became grimmer, even this coordination needed better efforts. Intelligence coordination is merely placing together intelligence collected by different agencies for reporting to policy makers. A higher responsibility is "intelligence arbitration" wherein the Arbitrator coordinates, asks questions, directs the intelligence agencies to fill in the gaps by further intelligence collection, tries to evolve a total picture for the highest policy makers and monitors implementation. This is called "intelligence integration" on which policy is formulated and executed. The 9/11 Commission found nine instances of serious negligence in regard to advance action to prevent 9/11 of which seven were failure in intelligence integration. It is because of this that a national office only for intelligence integration was recommended by the US 9/11 Commission. A Director, National Intelligence (DNI) was created who had full responsibility of coordination with 16 member US national intelligence community, establishing their priorities, resolving conflicts in collection process, sharing intelligence with all and monitoring implementation. In order to integrate terrorism intelligence NCTC was created under DNI. Both these were codified under the "Intelligence Reform & Terrorism Prevention Act" of 2004, Section 119 (d) (3) specified that NCTC "shall not direct the execution of any resulting operations". In other words it would not direct any combat "Operations" like how 26/11 Mumbai attacks were han-

Security Guards, nor will it investigate a terror case like how Mumbai Crime Branch did. Why is it so? This is because modern intelligence generates a huge volume of data. US has 16 agencies called "National Intelligence Community". Former DNI Mike McConnell once told the Council on Foreign Relations, New York (June 29, 2007) that American agencies collected one billion pieces of information daily. A large majority of this may not be of any value for countering terrorism but each piece has to be sifted, studied, analyzed and compared with previous inputs and then only conveyed to other departments. This "removing the grain from the chaff" is a huge responsibility. Sometimes it may so happen that a new piece of information may not be studied or acted upon which may produce catastrophic results. A concrete instance was the case of Abdulmutallab, the Nigerian bomber who had hidden a timed bomb in his underwear and tried to ignite it on a flight from Amsterdam to Detroit on 25 December 2009. Although his worried father had met the US Embassy in Abuja, Nigeria in November 2009 and warned about him, this important input was not connected properly nor pursued and Abdulmutallab was not put on "No Fly notification". He could therefore travel all the way from Abuja to Amsterdam and from there to Detroit, hiding his underwear liquid bomb. Fortunately his bomb did not blow up the plane. It only caused a minor fire. But these are costly mistakes. That is why the onerous task of intelligence integration and interpretation is kept separate from operations. If one agency does everything more and more mistakes will occur.

THE CONTROVERSY

The controversy erupted after our former Home Minister Shri P.Chidambaram unveiled his idea of our NCTC during a lecture at the IB in December 2009 in which he said that our NCTC would have the responsibilities of intelligence integration, operations and investigations. Shri Chidambaram had visited USA and UK to study their systems before he formulated his proposal. He sug-powers of search, arrest and investigation. He also said that our NCTC would be placed under the control of IB. In UK their "Joint Terrorism Analyses Centre" (JTAC) is under the MI-5 (IB's counterpart).

State leaders objected to this since under the 7th Schedule of our Constitution, "public order" and "police" are State subjects. They wondered how the Centre could encroach into their jurisdiction. The second controversy was placing our NCTC which would have legal charter under the control of our IB. In India no government had thought it necessary to make a law on national intelligence organizations like IB, RAW (External intelligence), DIA (Defence Intelligence Agency) etc on their functions, responsibilities or limitations of power. MI-5 on the other hand has a legal basis under the UK Security Service Act 1989 defining its role, responsibility and limitations. It was also specified that JTAC would be bound "by the provisions of the Intelligence Services Act 1994 and subject to the oversight of the Parliament's Intelligence & Security Committee". Faced with these controversies, our NCTC project has been frozen although the new Home Minister Shri Sushil Kumar Shinde is reviving it deleting its "Operations and Investigations" role. It is also said that it would be taken out of the purview of IB and placed independently. How far the watered down NCTC will be able to fulfill its role of intelligence integration is yet to be seen. This writer wants to make one thing clear: our NCTC will be totally ineffective if its role is not spelt out by a legal charter empowering it fully to meet its obligations of intelligence integration like its US counterpart who coordinates, asks questions, directs the intelligence agencies to fill in the gaps by further intelligence collection, tries to evolve a total picture for the highest policy makers and monitors implementation.
