The Role of the States in the National Food Security Bill

-Reetika Khera

The broad contours of the National Food Security Bill (NFSB) have been the subject of much debate. On one hand (e.g., the Congress manifesto), the provision of cheap grain alone would be adequate. On the other, activists believe the NFSB should ensure freedom from hunger, malnutrition and other deprivations associated with the lack of food. This requires not only nutritious food (including a balanced intake of calories, protein, fats and essential micro-nutrients) but also attention to child care, clean water, hygiene, basic health care and so on. Moreover, even with a narrow focus on food alone, a NFSB would have to link with a wide range of issues, including for instance access to land, water and forests, which play an important role in people's livelihoods.

Some of the positive highlights of the government's Bill are as follows. One, the Bill has elements of a life cycle approach to food security. For instance, the needs of infants (a focus on breastfeeding and maternal health) are different from the needs of vulnerable groups such as the aged, disabled and widows (who will require pensions as well as access to the Public Distribution System, a programme that provides subsidized grain), whereas for the urban destitute, community kitchens will be required to complement other interventions). Two, certain entitlements will be universal (e.g., hot cooked meals provided through the Mid Day Meal Scheme and Integrated Child Development Services Scheme). Three, the Bill combines in-kind transfers (e.g., school meals and subsidized grain) with cash transfers (e.g., maternity entitlements of Rs. 1000/month for six months for pregnant and lactating women). Major gaps remain. Social security pensions (old age, widows and for the disabled) supported by activists, were dropped by the National Advisory Council (NAC), quite likely on fiscal grounds. An elaborate and creative framework for grievance redressal suggested by the NAC has also been ignored by the government.

In the public debates on the NFSB the Public Distribution System (PDS) has tended to be equated with the entire Bill. Two issues have become particularly contentious - its desirability and framework. The PDS is widely regarded as corrupt and for some, it is irreversibly so. They propose replacing it with cash transfers. However, recent data suggest that (a) there are large state-wise variations in the performance of the PDS - in Tamil Nadu, for instance, the leakage was only 4% in 2009-10 and (b) that in many states in which the PDS was indeed "dysfunctional", the scheme is now showing signs of revival. E.g. between 2004-5 and 2009-10, according to National Sample Survey data, "leakages" from the PDS have come down from 50% to 10% in Chhattisgarh and from 75% to 33% in Orissa. At the all India level, the leakage has come down from 54% to 41%. At a recent meeting of the Food Ministers from the states all (except Bihar and Delhi) rejected the idea of cash transfers in lieu of food.

The second contentious issue is the framework for the PDS: the Bill, as tabled in Parliament, proposes a "targeted" framework for the PDS whereby only those households that are classified as "priority" or "general" will be entitled to PDS grain. The misclassification of households for this purpose is well-documented. According to NSS data for 2004-5, half of the poorest households (belonging to the bottom quintile of the monthly per capita expenditure distribution) did not have a BPL card. There are conceptual problems in this process (e.g., what criteria are used to identify poor households) and implementation errors (e.g., surveyors may not visit each household or households may misreport their information). Further, even if one is able to identify perfect indicators of poverty and implement the survey honestly, since people move in and out of poverty, there will always be problems in drawing up reliable BPL lists.

Priority households (46 per cent in rural areas and 28 per cent in urban areas) are assured of substantial PDS entitlements under the current version of the Bill. However, this is not very different from PDS entitlements as they currently exist (in terms of proportion of households covered, quantity and prices). For example, according to National Sample Survey data, 43 per cent of rural households and 28 per cent of urban households were buying PDS grain in 2009-10. In some states, such as Tamil Nadu, Andhra Pradesh and Himachal Pradesh, the Bill may force these states to cut back on current coverage or entitlements of some households.

The Standing Committee on Food submitted its report to Parliament and has suggested merging the two categories ("general" and "priority") into one, with identical entitlements. In addition, to keep the food

COMMUNITY RADIO IN NORTH EAST INDIA

-Dr Ankuran Dutta and Dr Anamika Ray

Community Radio has its unique value in the society. It provides a platform where members of a community or communities can discuss their problems, issues and exchange views. It develops a sense of belonging among the members of a community. The Union Information and Broadcasting Minister Manish Tiwari has recently commented, 'I am convinced that Community Radio are best suited to help the country achieve the goals of good governance through empowerment and social inclusion... Community Radio Broadcast can certainly enhance the participation of community in ensuring accountability and better service delivery by service providers.'

Community radio has already recognized as one of the most low cost media, specially suitable to reach remote communities and disadvantaged group of people-the illiterates, the disabled, women, youth and the poor, while offering a platform to intervene in the public debate, irrespective of people's educational level. Being a participatory communication medium, Community Radio can be instrumental in making the voices of the underprivileged and marginalized sections of society heard. CR has played a crucial role in creating awareness among people and informing citizens about their rights and remains the medium that reaches the widest audience worldwide. This multi-purpose medium can help people, including youth, to engage in discussions on topics that affect them. It can save lives during natural or human-made disasters; and it provides journalists with a platform to report facts and tell their stories. According to Uday Kumar Verma, the Secretary to the Ministry of Information and Broadcasting, Govt. of India, 'community Radios enable people to express themselves by encouraging direct dialogue. It promotes human rights and helps in creating an informed community. Community Radios have the potential to make a strategic contribution to education and social development through participatory processes. In the age of right to information, this medium is poised to grow from strength to strength.'

The community radio campaign was started in the western countries in the 1970s. In the United Kingdom, CRS was in operation on cable systems from the early 1970s onwards and mostly situated in new town areas and staffed and operated by volunteers. In the late 80s and early 90s the then newly formed Radio Authority awarded licenses to a number of new cable based community ventures. In August 1983, a group of community

Conference of Community Radio Broadcasters, only to realize at the meeting that there was already an embryonic world movement which brought them together. After 30 years of this conference of the functioning of AMARC (World Association of Community Radio Broadcasters), the movement of community radio has become an effective global sector of communication in making the world a better place.

In India the concept of community radio is quite of a recent origin. Though the campaign to legitimize community radio began in the mid 1990s, the Community Radio movement in India got a shot in the arm in December 2002 with the introduction of first Community Radio policy that allowed setting up of Community Radio Stations by well-established educational institutes. After a few years that matter has been reconsidered. The government has decided to broad base the policy by bringing nonprofit organisations like civil society and voluntary organisations etc under its ambit. The aim was to allow greater participation by the particular community on issues relating to development and social change.

In the north eastern region of India, the concept of community radio is still at its budding stage. Anthropologists have said that our seven states of North East com-service radio like All India Radio to reflect the desires of all the ethnic groups in a region of such diversity. The concept of community radio service was originated for such a diversified region. But it is useful that due to various reasons, the concept of community radio service is not immensely popular in the North East region unlike the southern part of India. Krishna Kanta Handiqui State Open University, the only State Open University of the entire north east, took the first initiative to launch the first community radio service of the region. The University aims to provide education beyond barriers to reach the unreached of the society. It launched the first community radio of the north east on 28th of January, 2009 at 90.4 MHz with an experimental broadcasting from Assam Administrative Staff College, Guwahati. The Assam Chief Minister formally launched the regular broadcasting of Jnan Taranga, the KKHSOU Community Radio on 20th of November, 2010. It is very significant that the second community radio of the region, 'Radio Luit' of Gauhati University was started on 1st March, 2011.

Krishna Kanta Handiqui State Open University and Gauhati University are two organisations that have been trying to air the programmes for the student commu-

What is IPR?

Intellectual Property Rights are mechanism to grant exclusive rights to certain creative ideas or business concepts to any individual or business entity. Essentially, it is a territorial property right deterring others to enter the domain. However if anyone wants to proclaim its usage then they have to pay royalty to the registered innovator! The IPR assumes great significance specifically in current context because of the commodification of every product and its marketability with heightened competition. Creating a space of its own in the market, and disallowing or restricting others to enter the space provides a monopoly as well as enhanced profitability. IPR therefore becomes a medium of allowing this monopoly. It is a weapon granted to the innovator making him the supreme.

IP rights are a bundle of exclusive rights in relation to the particular form or manner in which ideas or information is manifested. The package consists of 8 rights namely- patent, copyright, trademark, industrial designs, layout design of integrated circuit, geographical indication, trade secrets and protection of plant varieties. These days, virtually every second global product is protected under various sub-divisions of the law, e.g., DVDs under patents laws, softwares like Windows vista or a music composition under copyright laws, goodwill of product associated with its logo under trademark laws, appearance and -design of a Rolex watch or apple iphone- by laws relating to designs, Darjeeling tea or a bottle of champagne specifying the origin by Geographical indication etc.

Institutional mechanism

The World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO) is the global organization which acts as watchdog to guarantee that the rights of creators and owners of intellectual property are protected well all across the globe. However each country has its own set of rules and jurisdiction. The TRIPS Agreement introduced global minimum standards for protecting and enforcing nearly all forms of IPR. However, TRIPS also contains provisions that allow a degree of flexibility and sufficient room for countries to accommodate their own patent and intellectual property systems and developmental needs. This means countries have a certain amount of freedom in modifying their regulations and, various options exist for them in formulating their national legislation. For a legal protection to any innovation, it has to be filed separately for each country to hold its right. India, a signatory to Trade Related aspects of Intellectual Property rights (TRIPS), too has outlined its own manual and standards on IPR.

For instance, the patent war between Samsung and Apple phones does not stand within Indian jurisdiction as the patents are not filed in India. Therefore both of them can sell their products without any hitch. This in a sense signifies that even a small invention having some kind of legal protection can be an asset for the individual as well as the country itself.

Like a land property which has to be registered through a legal entity to proclaim its ownership, IP right has to also undergo the same process. Therefore the legal aspect becomes important. The way the legal document pertaining to the ownership of the intellectual property is drafted is the basis of how much hold/ scope one has on the innovation. For example the claims made in the patent application actually mark the periphery of the innovation.

Need of IPR professionals

The development of skills and competence to manage IPR and leverage its influence requires increasing focus. There is a need for developing skills in filing, reading and exploiting patents which will be crucial in the years to come. Our inventions must be protected. We must fully understand the implications of the patents granted to our competitors. Our graduates emerging from the engineering and technology streams have to be trained in IPR as they are the strategic assets in the battle being fought in the knowledge market.

Industries, Corporate sector, Research & Development institutes, Scientists, knowledge process outsourcing (KPO) / LPO etc, all organizations which are into development of new products or processes having industrial applications need IPR professionals. It covers a large number of industries both high end ones as well as the MSME sector like IT, Pharma, Biotech, energy, manufacturing, textiles, films, music companies etc. Apart from drafting of applications, other roles of IPR specialists are IP evaluation, Patent landscaping, Commercialization analysis, Identifying useless IPR, Determining the royalties and Market dynamics of technology sub-segment.

Skill Set

An IP Professional is required to perform multitude of tasks and should be well-versed with both scientific and legal concepts (IP related). An IP professional can be conducting patent and prior art searches, which actually involves searching all the patented and non patented literature, filing patents, drafting patent application at the patent office, prosecuting patents at the patent office, litigating at the court, conducting trademark searches, managing IP portfolio etc. However, patent filing, patent application drafting needs technical skills. An IPR specialist therefore should have a degree in science or engineering and then supplement this with a degree in law.

Candidates having a science/ engineering or technology degree of a recognized university, above 21 years of age are eligible to appear for the Patent Agent Examination conducted by the Patent Office, Govt of India (www.ipindia.nic.in); after qualifying they would become patent agents.

Courses on IPR

The Ministry of Human Resource Development Under the scheme of Intellectual Property Education, Research and Public Outreach (IPERPO) has so far set up 18 IPR Chairs in various universities and institutes considering their potential for development and growth of IPR Education, Research and Training. Out of 18 IPR Chairs set up so far, five (5) IPR Chairs are in Universities, five (5) IPR Chairs are in IITs five (5) IPR Chairs are in National Law Universities and three IPR chairs in IIMs (Kolkata, Bangalore and Ahmedabad).

Apart from this there are also Govt. as well as private Institutes offering LLB with specialization in IPR, Post Graduation Diploma in IPR, Certificate Courses, Distance Learning as well as Online Courses in IPR. grain requirement within the earlier limits, it has suggested 5 kg per capita (instead of 7kg per capita for priority households and 3kg per capita for general households). Thus, the proposal is to cover 75% in rural areas and 50% in urban areas, with 5kg per capita for all entitled persons at Re. 1 (for coarse cereals), Rs. 2 (wheat) and Rs. 3 (rice).

Another question that has arisen is how the 75% (50%) rural (urban) coverage should be allocated across states. Some were of the opinion that it should be the same in all states. However, at the 13 February 2013 meeting of food ministers from the states, a consensus emerged that this should be allocated across states in such a way that poorer states get a higher coverage. The Planning Commission is supposed to derive the coverage rates for states.

There are many weaknesses in the Bill as it exists - e.g., much more needs to be done for ensuring children's food security, grievance redressal mechanisms are weak, social security pensions have been dropped, the door to switch (arbitrarily) to cash transfers has been left wide open in the Bill. Many of these drawbacks can be remedied without any financial implications (e.g., provisions for children), and in fact some of these will ensure that the money allocated to the food bill is spent well (e.g., provisions related to grievance redressal).

In spite of all the weaknesses (some of which will hopefully be remedied before it is passed), the Bill can be a great opportunity to tackle hunger and nutrition in the country. The states will have an important role to play in this. In the case of the PDS, with 75% rural and 50% urban coverage, means that a major overhaul of the list of ration card holders will be required in the poorer states such as Bihar, Jharkhand, Orissa and Uttar Pradesh. Currently, these states cover roughly less than half of the rural population. This is likely to go up to more than 75%, so additional households will be identified. A reliable, updated and computerized database of ration card holders and end-to-end computerization will be the first step towards successful implementation of the NFSB.

A credible grievance redressal system (including toll free helplines) need to be put in place. Thankfully, many innovative measures have been tried in different states which can be tested elsewhere. Some states have Tehsildars responsible for grievance redressal, and this has delivered positive results. Since the Tehsildar is an official of the revenue department, (s) he is independent of the implementing agency (the food and civil supplies department). Some states (e.g., Rajasthan) have shown that painting a toll free number and the ration dealers numbers outside PDS outlets can also bring greater accountability to the system. Most importantly, where dealers have been found to be at fault, the running of the PDS outlet has been handed over to the Gram Panchayat, or Self-help Group or co-operative societies. Electronic weighing scales, in widespread use in Tamil Nadu, Chhattisgarh and Himachal Pradesh, have also helped reduce corruption at the PDS outlet. Battery run "point of sale" machines (resembling mini-computers) generate printed bills along with a voice over facility which reads out the quantity, price and amount of each sale has allows even those who are unable to read and write to monitor their purchases. To curb diversion of grain to the open market between government depots and PDS outlets, trucks have been painted in a uniform colour or more advanced technology, such as GPS tracking, has been used.

Many states have already embarked upon this path of reforms, an intelligent mix of transparency and accountability measures facilitated by technology, and achieved significant results in a relatively short span of time. Yet there are many others (especially the northern and eastern states) that need to get their act together to make a dent in the overall leakages in the system.

the stations. Unfortunately, no other stations make it possible to air the community programmes from any part of the region. But, recently the Govt. of Assam has initiated to set up a few community radio stations in different parts of the state through the Directorate of Information and Public Relations in association with K K Handiqui State Open University. The officials of the Ministry of Information and Broadcasting of the Union Govt. has said in the 3rd Community Radio Sammelan organized in New Delhi from 9-11 February, 2013. "India has completed a decade of Community Radio since the first Community Radio policy of the country came into effect in 2002. In the last ten years of the Community Radio movement, new ground has been broken and new avenues have been created for growth and progress, but the potential of this participatory communication medium has a lot more scope."

As of 5th February 2013, there are 144 operational Community Radio stations in India, operating from different parts of the country, catering to diverse communities and under different situations. The Ministry of I & B has received a total number of 1156 applications so far from 2004 and issued the Letters of Intent (LOI) to 418 organisations, where as 189 stations have signed the Grant of Permission of Agreement (GOPA). The following table indicates the status of the Community Radio in the north eastern part of the country.

The data may not be considered as very encouraging. Except the state of Assam, all other states of the region have no functional radio station. The Ministry of Information and Broadcasting should give special attention to aware the communities and general public of the state of Mizoram, as not a single initiative has been taken by either any educational institutes or any NGOs to setup community radio in the state. Special attention should be given to three states, namely, Meghalaya, Sikkim and Nagaland. A special allocation of fund may be considered by the Ministry to encourage the educational institutions and NGOs to start community radios for empowering the socially underdeveloped communities of the region.

It is indeed a good news for the community radio movement that the government has recently decided to set up a Community Radio Support Fund in this Five Year Plan. Manish Tiwari, the Union I & B Minister has said on 11th February that 500 new community radio stations would be set up in the 12th Plan period. In the years to come, the government is also committed to work out an integrated licensing process i.e. single window clearance for Community Radio stations so that more and more stations can be set up. There is a lot more scope for Community Radio to get included in the planning process of the government to provide enhanced convergence. One cannot ignore the fact that the status of CR still is unfolded in the country. There are a few reasons, such as a lengthy and difficult procedure of licensing, financial constraints etc. To strengthen this movement in the country, the Ministry of Information and Broadcasting, Govt. of India needs to maintain some leniency in providing licenses and at least provide some financial support to run the radio station for the first two years.

Supreme Court Judgment on Cancer Drugs : Right Prescription

Foreign pharma companies could now be forced to overhaul their strategy for the Indian market by striking more local deals and cutting sky-high drug prices after the Supreme Court slammed the door of Swiss giant Novartis' attempts to gain a patent for its blood cancer-busting drug Glivec. Cancer Patients Aid Association (CPAA) which moved the Supreme Court to keep the prices of the cancer drug low has won a seven year legal battle against Swiss drug maker Novartis. Mr. Y.K. Sapru, founder Chairman of CPAA in an interview to Mr. Anurag Misra, Chief Editor tells what the judgment means to cancer patients and other issues related to patents.

Q. What does the Supreme Court judgment imply? And what will be its impact on patients across the country?

Mr. Y.K. Sapru (YKS). The landmark judgment of the Supreme Court on Novartis case will ensure that no ever greening of patents will take place in India in future and life saving patented drugs will be in future available at affordable prices. So far as Glivec is concerned its generic equivalents are due to earlier court judgments already available at Rs 8000 for one months treatment as compared to Glivec which costs over rupees one lakh for one months medication. In India, about 2,00,000 people suffer from chronic myeloid leukaemia and about 30,000 are added every year. With prices of the drug remaining low, all these people would benefit.

Q. Do you see the judgment has done a fine balance between innovation and affordability especially in the backdrop of apprehensions raised in certain quarters that the judgment is likely to stall research in medicines and also flow of investment in the country?

YKS. The Supreme Court judgment is well balanced and will not adversely affect research or inflow of newer drugs into our country. The cost of discovering a new chemical compound is highly exaggerated by the MNCs. Take the case of Glivec where the cost of discovering the compound as per Novartis is estimated to be around us $ 8 million while the net return from Glivec world wide in its first year of introduction was us $ one billion. The profits at the existing prices are way above the cost of discovery. Hence neither innovation nor inflow of newer compounds in our country will be adversely affected by the judgment of the Supreme Court.

Q. As a big generics producer, India is a very important drug provider, what is going to be impact on Indian pharmaceutical industry?

YKS. As the biggest supplier of generics in the world, the impact of this judgment will be a big positive as many applications for newer patents for marginally superior compounds will be rejected taking example of this watershed judgment of the Supreme Court.

Q. What is CPAA's next objective? Are you planning to take the struggle forward and fight more such cases?

YKS. Now, we are planning a two-pronged attack. First, pick up expensive patented products and get their patents cancelled. Second, convince the government to allow compulsory licences for such products to allow competition in the market. This would bring down prices for patients. We have already started working on one such drug - Herceptine, used for the treatment of breast cancer. While the patented drug costs Rs. 1,50,000 for a single course, a generic version can be made available at a much lower price.

Q. There is a view that provisions such as compulsory licence and Section 3(d) Indian Patents Act. (1970) may hit the introduction of new drugs in India. Don't you think that would be a bigger threat to patients with unmet medical needs?

YKS. That is not true. Even now, there is no research taking place in India. Not a single drug is discovered here. There are generics available all over the world and research happens everywhere. Even for generics, companies are required to prove their efficacy.

SPECIAL CATEGORY STATUS AND CURRENT DEMANDS BY SPECIFIC STATES

-Sona Mitra

Special category status for states was introduced in 1969 and was granted to three states namely, Assam, Nagaland and Jammu & Kashmir. The special category status (SCS) essentially pertains to determine the allocation of central assistance for state plans in India, which is based on a formula known as the Gadgil formula, named after the person, D R Gadgil, who devised the formula. It was adopted for the distribution of plan assistance during Fourth and Fifth Five Year Plans. Prior to Fourth Five Year Plan, the allocation of Central Assistance to the State Plans was based on aschematic pattern with no definite formula for allocation. The Gadgil formula emerged from the demand for a transparent and objective formula-based horizontal sharing of resources between the states. During the tenure of the Fifth Finance Commission, the same formula was also adopted by the Finance Commission which then conferred special status to the above-mentioned three states on the basis of harsh terrain, backwardness and social problems prevailing in these states. As per Gadgil formula a special category state would get preferential treatment in federal assistance and tax breaks. The special-category states have been provided with significant excise duty concessions in order to help these states attract large number of industrial units to establish manufacturing facilities within their territory. The main idea behind according special status to a state is to facilitate the growth and development of the state to bring it at par with the others in terms of improvements in IMR, birth rate, population control, female literacy status, tax effort and fiscal mechanism and improved per capita income.

Then existing formula was revised for the first time in 1980 to include five more states under special category. The newly included states were Arunachal Pradesh, Himachal Pradesh, Manipur, Meghalaya, Mizoram. This modified formula then became the basis for allocation in the Sixth and Seventh Five year Plans. In 1991, the formula was revised and renamed Gadgil-Mukherjee formula, adding the name of the then Deputy Chairman of the Planning Commission and was approved by the National Development Council (NDC). This formula has been in operation since the

While distributing the Central Assistance to State Plans, the main methodological features of the formula consist of the following:

- (I) From the total Central assistance, funds are set apart for externally aided schemes.
  - (II) From the balance, specific amounts are allocated to the Special Area Programmes i.e. for the Hill Areas, Tribal Areas, Border Areas, N.E.C. and Other Programmes
  - (III) From the balance, 30% is allocated to the Special Category States.
- For the general category states, the following weightage on variables are assigned:
- i. Population: 55 percent
  - ii. Per Capita income: 25 percent
  - iii. Fiscal efforts 5 percent
  - iv. Special problems: 15 percent

The NDC has defined the special problems under seven heads, namely, coastal areas, flood and drought prone areas, desert problems, special environmental issues, exceptionally sparse and densely populated areas, problem of slums in urban areas, special financial difficulties for achieving minimum reasonable plan size. Post 2000, the formula was once again reviewed and the component of 'performance' by the respective states was adopted. The weightage under this head was 7.5 percent. Within this, 2.5 percent of the allocation was based on tax efforts of the states, 2 percent for fiscal management at state level and 1 percent for undertaking population control measures. Special attention was also paid to the improvements in female literacy and accordingly 1 percent allocation was set aside taking female literacy into account. Timely completion of externally funded projects and land reforms undertaken accounted for the remainder of the 7.5 percent figure.

The main reason for categorising between general and special category states is the development of the states which face problems due to hilly terrains, international borders, etc. and has been deprived of robust industrial development and experience persistent problems of low state finances. There is no objective criteria and weight for distribution among the special category states. The main considerations are the level of allotment in the previous years, resource position of etc. In such cases the formula for resource sharing does not apply. Under the SCS, till 2004-05, 90 percent of the central assistance used to be treated as grant and remaining 10 percent was considered as interest-free loan with rationalization of public expenditure based on growth enhancing sectoral allocation of resources. In general category states, the ratio used to be 30:70. Since 2005-06 and with the advent of 'big bang' Centrally Sponsored Schemes (CSS), the differentiation in central transfers happened in terms of certain conditionalities. While the loan component has been reduced substantially for both general and special category states, the general states are required to provide for matching grants under certain scheme guidelines. For example, under the Sarva Shiksha Abhiyan (SSA), for general category states, 65 percent of the total expenditure is borne by the centre and the state is required to provide for the rest of the 35 percent, belying which, its subsequent transfers get affected. However under SCS, the financial norm is 90:10. Similarly, under the Indra Awas Yojana (IAY) the centre-state funding norm is 75:25 for general states but is 90:10 under SCS. For certain schemes such matching grants are generally not required at all under the SCS. There exists no hard budget constraint for SCS states as the central transfer is high. Currently, there are twelve states falling under this category. However, there still remains a strong necessity of developing all these states at par with others.

The latest dispute is regarding the issue of conferring a special category status to the state of Bihar. The chief minister of Bihar, Mr. Nitish Kumar has time and again made this demand based on grounds of economic backwardness (low per capita income, high inequality, etc.) and sharing borders with Nepal. This demand has been raised since the Nitish Kumar government assumed power in the state during the tenure of the 13th Finance Commission. The Bihar government has been strongly demanding the SCS as it argues that such status would enable increased government expenditure and hence would be able to attract private investment via the Keynesian 'crowding in' mechanism, which is necessary to increase overall investment in the state. Currently the state government of the total expenditure in the state and hence forms a major part of the GSDP of Bihar. However, while speculations are high as to whether Bihar would be eligible for SCS, it has already been announced by the Planning commission that allocations towards the Backward Regions Grant Fund (BRGF) would be raised for the state. In the meanwhile, the Inter Ministerial Group on redefining the special category state had rejected Bihar's plea to be considered a special state. The group of Ministers cited that Bihar can get rid of present backwardness through proper utilization of its geographical and human resources assets. Following Bihar, five other states namely, Goa, Rajasthan, Jharkhand, Chhattisgarh and Odisha have also been demanding this status due to extreme poverty, economic backwardness, non-compatible terrains and also the presence of Naxalites within the state territories due to which no proper development has happened within the states. To quote the Odisha Chief Minister Mr. Naveen Patnaik on objectives behind seeking the SCS category, "The first objective is to seek more liberal funding from the central government further strengthen our efforts for the accelerated development of Odisha. The second objective is to seek tax breaks that special category states are entitled to with a view to attract private investment in labour intensive sectors to create more job opportunities for the people of Odisha and to further expedite development of the state" (TOI, 5 April, 2013).

While the center has chosen to give a muted response to the demands with similar reactions from the NDC for a long time and speculations are high among stakeholders, the current Finance Minister while presenting his Union Budget 2013-14 has hinted towards setting up a committee to look into the matter of redefining 'special category'. The committee is supposed to examine the validity of the several demands made by the states, probably an indication that points towards centre's softening stance over the demands made by the states.
