1. Special package of Rs. 12000 crore for Bihar

[We need to create around 1.5 crore jobs per year in the next decade to provide gainful employment to India's youth says Dr. S. Ramadorai, Adviser to the Prime Minister in the National Council on Skill Development, Govt. of India. In an interview to Anurag Misra, Chief Editor and Maruf Alam, Editor, Dr. S. Ramadorai says that skilling and making the citizens of India job ready are the government's top priorities. He says job creation has to move closer to smaller towns and rural areas and also said that special training programmes have been introduced for the youth of Jammu & Kashmir & North East.]

Q. How is the current employment scenario and skill development industry in India?

Dr.S. Ramadorai (SR) According to an estimate, India needs to create around 1 to 1.5 crore jobs per year for the next decade to provide gainful employment to its young population. Large businesses in India, both in the public and private sector, will not be able to generate employment at such a large scale. The engine for growth will be SME's and entrepreneurs and we need to create an enabling environment for them. Another issue is that there is a geographical mismatch between where the jobs exist and available supply pool. This results in the situation where there aren't enough skilled people to take advantage of even the existing manpower shortage in the industry. There is a clear need of rapid skill development activities which can harness our "demographic dividend" not only for domestic opportunities but also to meet the skilled manpower requirements abroad.

Skill development industry in India has seen a rapid growth in response to the urgent needs of the industry, as well as due to significant impetus provided by the government. The 2009 National Policy on Skill Development laid the institutional structure for skill development in the country at various levels. The three tier institutional structure consists of the PM's National Council on Skill Development, the National Skill Development Coordination Board and the National Skill Development Corporation.

Fuelled by various initiatives of the government which fund and promote skilling activities through increased collaboration with the private sector, there has been a significant activity in this arena. We still have a long way to go in terms of infrastructure creation, capacity building, quality assurance, and employability, and I am confident that we as a nation will be able to provide more and more of our youth the opportunities to participate in mainstream economic activities.

Q. What are issues in the lack of development of skill management?

SR. Scale & quality is one of the major challenges in the skill development space in India. Our existing system falls short on both counts - quantity and quality. We are simply not producing a sufficient number of skilled personnel - whether this is from the viewpoint of addressing the unemployment and under-employment problems in society today or from the point of view of industry gaining access to skilled personnel. critical Efficient use of current funds and lack of sufficient funds for skilling also poses a challenge towards attaining the ambitious skilling targets of skilling 5 crore persons in the Twelfth Plan period, and a considerably higher number in the Thirteenth plan period. Current government capacities and assigned funds can skill only approximately 60-70 lakh persons annually. This creates a large shortfall, which needs to be addressed urgently.

Skill management can be more prudent and efficient if we are able to promote and facilitate convergence of skilling initiatives in States. There is a need to fund the shortfall in skilling targets through a central authority; lay down strategies, financing and governance models to expedite skill development activities; coordinate standards of skill development working in close coordination with regulators concerned like NCVT, AICTE, Sector Skill Councils; monitor, evaluate and analyse the outcomes of various schemes and programmes relating to skill development through a technology-enabled national monitoring system, and suggest/ initiate mid-course corrections, additions and closure of parts or whole of any particular programme/scheme.

Q. Tell us about, some of the government initiatives to bridge the gaps and making youth employable, especially the activities of National Council and Skill Development (NCSD)?

SR. The target of 500 million people by 2022 was set by the Hon'ble Prime Minister to bridge the burgeoning skill gap faced by the Indian industry, despite the bulge in our workforce.

As highlighted by the National Skill Development Policy of 2009 as well as the Twelfth Five Year Plan, skilling our people is among the most important priorities of the government. A coordinated strategy for skill development has been formulated amongst the key stakeholders, Central Ministries, State Governments, National Council on Skill Development (NCSD), National Skill Development Coordination Board (NSDCB), National Skill Development Corporation (NSDC) and the industry.

Twenty Central Ministries have been engaged in skill development through several schemes they have devised and which are implemented in States in partnership with them. State Skill Development Missions, which have been set up as per the National Skill Development Policy in most States to coordinate the agenda at the State level, have empanelled government linked trainings through them.

Private investment in the sector is also being encouraged. NSDC was set-up with the mandate of providing soft loans to private training providers. Ministry of Labour and Employment has been encouraging investments through Industrial Training Centres (ITCs) and Vocational Training Providers (VTPs) under Craftsmen Training Scheme (CTS) and Modular Employable Skills (MES) schemes. Similarly, at the State level, governments are providing infrastructure and incentives to encourage private investment in skills. Corporates, public and private, are also being encouraged to actively participate through utilizing CSR funds for skill development, adopting IT/ITCs, providing on the job trainings and apprenticeships, participating in development of course content and curriculum as members of Sector Skill Councils (SSCs) etc.

My office has been working towards the skill development objective in five key areas: structural & policy interventions; funding, state, sector & regional focus; stakeholder participation; and use of technology.

In the structural and policy interventions during the past, we have worked closely with various central ministries and have analyzed existing schemes and new proposals to make recommendations to make them more effective. We are also working with the Ministry of Human Resource Development and the Ministry of Labour towards developing a National Skills Qualification Framework which would be a national standard of qualifications with multiple entry and exit points. An appropriate institutional structure in the form of a National Skill Development Authority (NSDA) has also been proposed for efficient and systematic management of all the skill development efforts across the country.

For opening the avenues of funding for skill development, we worked with the Indian Banks' Association and the Department of Financial Services for a Model Loan Scheme for Vocational Education and Training, which has now been adopted and implemented by various banks. In another key initiative, we worked with the Ministry of Finance to exclude important categories of vocational training courses from the purview of Service Tax. Our office has been working closely with the State Skill Development Missions and concerned departments across States to develop a comprehensive action plan to achieve skill development targets. I led an initial round of engagement

In the last few years, Veterinary Science and Animal Husbandry have attracted much attention, rather the 'due' attention across the country. Despite animals being the backbone of agriculture, animal husbandry and veterinary science were neglected until recently. However, when crops failed and farmers suffered deep financial losses, animal husbandry came to their rescue. With this the unlimited opportunities available in field of veterinary science have come to light. Apart from failure of agriculture, there are other factors that increased focus on veterinary science and animal husbandry. These include growing concerns about food safety and increased awareness about the need to raise the nutritional levels of food consumed by people of our country. Human healthcare research and need to protect animals, especially the endangered species to help ecosystem maintain balance, are some more.

In the recent years, cases of zoonosis (diseases that spread between species, especially from animals to humans) have increased. In the effort to control the spread of infectious diseases among animals and from animals to humans, veterinarians play an important role. And last but not the least, people are increasingly rearing animals as pets. Veterinary Science is the branch of medicine that deals with diagnosis and treatment of diseases in animals. Doctors who treat animals are called veterinarians, veterinary surgeons or vets. To become a veterinarian, a candidate must pursue his Bachelor's degree in Veterinary Science, Surgery or Medicine (BVS, BVSc, BVetMed or BVMS). For those interested in studying further, there are Master of Veterinary Science (M.V.Sc) and Ph. D courses. M.V.Sc comes with specialisations like Surgery, Medicine, Gynaecology, Poultry, Dairy,

Anatomy, Pathology and Microbiology.

Employment Opportunities

Career opportunities for veterinarians depend on aptitude, area of specialisation and aspirations of candidates. Usually, students who opt for clinical specialisations like Surgery and Medicine, work as doctors. Specialisations related to production, Poultry and Dairy may lead to entrepreneurship. Para-clinical subjects like Anatomy are usually opted by students who aspire teaching or research. Specialisations like Microbiology may lead to career in labs and diagnostic centres. Veterinarians can practice at government or private veterinary hospitals or start their own clinics. Animal Husbandry departments of state and central governments hire veterinarians. Job roles in these departments come with a variety of responsibilities and wide scope for learning. Another option for Veterinary Science graduates is to take up a job in animal food and allied companies. These days, earning an MBA degree, is a fad among veterinary science graduates. The combination qualifies them to assume product development, sales and marketing roles and grow in the corporate world. Pharmaceutical and biotechnology organisations and companies that are into animal or human healthcare research are some more options. Here it is important to note that results from animal healthcare research, often, directly influence human healthcare research. Data from animal health research is extrapolated to produce information that is critical to progress in human health research. Also, new medicines, diagnostic and treatment procedures meant for human beings are first tested on animals. So animals are extensively used for experiments in pharmaceutical and healthcare research organisations. These organisations require services of veterinarians during the experiments and also to take care of the animals. Zoos, kennels and animal care centres, which are usually NGOs, are some more places veterinary science graduates can explore for employment opportunities.

Success Factors

To succeed in this field, the candidate should have genuine interest in Veterinary Science. He should be passionate about animals and empathetic towards farmers and pet owners. Apart from strong technical skills, willingness to learn, and commitment and dedication to work are imperative. Some jobs, especially with the government departments may require the candidate to work in rural and semi-urban areas. So candidates aspiring such jobs should be willing to relocate and work at any time, situation and place.

Remuneration

The average salary for most of the entry-level roles ranges between Rs. 20,000 - 30,000. Nature of employment, employer, location of workplace, job role and competence of the candidate are some factors that determine the remuneration. Benefits and growth go up with education, experience and skills.

Challenges

Having to depend solely on clinical signs for diagnosis of diseases and treatment is one of the challenges faced by veterinarians. Also, they are under the risk of getting affected by diseases while treating animals. Sometimes, when animals are too old or sick to fend for themselves, veterinarians face the challenge of administering them euthanasia. Veterinary science professionals working for government departments and business organisations sometimes have to deal with non-technical work like helping farmers with paper work or collecting data for research from owners of animals. Veterinary science has a plethora of opportunities to those with genuine interest in the field. Against the common belief, the field actually provides remuneration and growth on par with several 'glamorous' fields. Also, disproving the myth that the field is not suitable for women because it requires stamina, these days, many women veterinarians are confidently handling complicated technical procedures successfully.

Converting waste byproduct to livelihood opportunities

- Arun Kumar

Husk Power Systems is a small company that is pioneering rural electrification using decentralized generation and distribution of power. Since 2007 it has been using the technology of Biomass Gasification and Solar Photo Voltaic to electrify more than 400 villages and hamlets in five districts of Bihar. As part of its vision of comprehensive rural development on the backbone of electricity, Husk Power Systems uses the byproduct of its biomass gasification process, char, to produce Incense Sticks. Along with utilizing the byproduct and generating some revenue, the Incense Sticks production is a significant step towards livelihood generation, mainly for women of the villages that are served by Husk Power Systems.

The use of incense sticks or Agarbattis is increasing day by day. In India, two or three sticks may be lighted every day in a typical household. The variety, effectiveness and low cost of incense sticks is making them popular as air fresheners and room deodorizers in households and workplaces. They are being increasingly used for therapeutic usage in aromatherapy, preventing infection and even repelling mosquitoes and other insects.

core market globally, out of which more than half are produced in India, and the market has been growing annually at a compounded rate of more than 7%. With over 80% of production coming from the cottage industries, India has not been able to keep up with the growing market average throughput process. Husk Power Systems has innovated a much simpler process that gives a reasonable throughput without any skill requirement, thereby, making it possible for any person to start producing sticks. Husk Power produces unscented sticks which are procured by

Husk Power started experimenting with the idea of converting the waste char to incense sticks in district of West Champaran in Bihar about two years ago and after perfecting its unique process in 2011, it currently produces 10 tonne of unscented sticks every month employing about 100 women from the villages of Tamkuha, Khotahwa and Bajarkaraiyya in West Champaran. Each of these women earn between Rs 2000 - 3000 per month for 5-6 hours of work every day. In the words of Radha Devi, one of workers of Husk Power's Incense Sticks plant, "We get to spend money on clothes and education of our kids and save a little for emergencies as well."

Husk Power is all set to increase the production ten folds to 100 tonne per month, providing extra income to more than 1000 households. It plans to launch its own brand of 'green-agarbatti' thereby further increasing the employment opportunity in its villages. In words of Husk Power's founder, "We aim to capture 10% of the domestic market of unscented sticks in next couple of years while providing a respectable income to thousands of households in rural Bihar".

states, setting overall targets and priorities for skill development in their respective States. Subsequently, we held two rounds of workshops with the 21 most populous States in order to learn of the successes and challenges faced by the respective State Missions as well as the other key departments involved in funding or implementing vocational training programmes. We have helped the states map and dovetail funds under various Central and District schemes for skill development and facilitated linkages with Government and Private training providers that provide a minimum of 70% employment, across sectors.

To ensure participation of various stakeholders, we have also held consultations with various PSUs to drive skill development through a portion of their CSR budgets, with NGOs to leverage their strengths in furthering the skilling agenda, and with various industry bodies for skill advocacy.

Q. What is the vision of 12th Five year plan on skill development?

SR. Drawing from the significant gains of private participation in meeting the policy objectives of the Government during the Eleventh Plan, there is a thrust to expand and reinforce these initiatives during the Twelfth Plan. One of the key areas of focus in this approach is employment and skill development to create productive employment opportunities. It is envisaged that PPP models would successfully foray into the social sectors such as skill development and education during the Twelfth Plan period, and promote universal access while ensuring quality in the delivery of services. Sector Skill Councils led by the industry are expected to play a central role in defining the requirement of manpower in terms of quality and quantity, create plans for skill development and improve the quality of the training system.

Expanding the outreach by adopting established and innovative approaches to ensure equitable access to training to everyone is one of the key objectives, and technology is envisioned to be a key enabler in this effort. Given the shortage of faculty in teaching skills, ICT enabled hub and spoke models, which leverage a single teacher to manage multiple classes in dispersed locations is an example. Technology can transform governance and service delivery in areas through real time monitoring mechanism. Panchayats are being connected through optic fibre, with this and rural broadband backbone across the country we have yet another channel of delivery that will help realise this vision.

The Plan also envisions the enablement of effective coordination between different ministries, the Centre and the States and public and private providers, and creation of institutional mechanism for research, development, quality assurance, examination and certification, affiliation and accreditation and coordination of skill development across the country.

In terms of absolute targets, during the Twelfth Five Year Plan, 50 million non-farm employment opportunities are proposed to be created and at least equivalent number of people would be provided skill certification.

Q. How can private sector contribute in skill development to supplement the Government efforts?

SR. Private sector participation will increase when training of people is viewed as an investment rather than an expense. The world over it is industry that leads the creation of an environment that promotes both quality and quantity of skilled workforce. The Government's role is that of a facilitator. This mind set change will take time however we are beginning to see a shift already.

Given the situation, the government has taken concrete steps to enable industry leadership in skill development. Industry is best placed to develop sector-specific skill competency standards and qualifications. Sector Skill Councils (SSCs) are being set up as industry-led bodies to estimate skill-gaps, create standards and certification, curriculum for high demand trades, conduct training of trainers and build a network of training partners to facilitate ramp up of trainings. The National Occupational Standards (NOS) for different job roles across industries will help in designing measurable criteria for determining employability that would benefit both the job-giver and the job seeker, and the industry can help immensely in developing these through the SSCs. Proactive involvement of industry in IT/ITCs through participation in Institute Management Committees (IMCs) is another way to ensure relevant, and quality training in these institutes.

Industry bodies like CII, ASSOCHAM and FICCI have been actively involved in identification of skill gaps in the country. NASSCOM has proactively tried to build a skills registry of IT professionals to bridge the supply-demand gap in the market. In niche sectors like mining, ship-building, etc. industry players have proactively identified trades that require skills, and have started investing in training. Industry has also been working with State and Central Governments to conduct trainings. All these are welcome steps, and need to be expanded.

Internships and apprenticeships is the best way for Industry to play a major role in the skilling initiative, given the high demand for labour. Currently, such 'earn while you learn' models have been highly under leveraged. However, we do need to drastically change our labour laws to attract industry towards this path.

In terms of public private partnerships, setting up of NSDC was one of the most significant steps undertaken by the government. The Corporation has been contributing significantly to the overall 500 million target by fostering private sector initiatives in skilling and by providing viability gap funding. Ministry of Labour and Employment is also working with the private sector towards upgradation of 3000 ITIs. There is a need to drive more such PPP initiatives to accelerate overall skill development efforts.

Q. North East Region and J&K are priority areas of the government, what are the programs which have been undertaken in this regard and what is in future? Kindly give details for the benefit of youth of North East and J&K?

SR. In 2011, the expert group formulated under the Chairmanship of Dr. C. Rangarajan, to formulate a jobs plan for the State of Jammu and Kashmir, recommended two flagship schemes for J&K - Himayat and Udaan. Both these scheme were launched in 2011.

Himayat, under the Ministry of Rural Development (MoRD), aims to train 1,00,000 J&K youth over five years through private training providers in entry-level jobs. Short-duration training of 3 to 6 months is provided under the scheme in training centres across the State. Placements are largely in the service sector in companies like Cafe Coffee Day, V-Mart, Bajaj Alliance, Airtel Call Centre, etc. both within and outside the State. In 2012-13, around 5,400 youth have undergone training of which ~45% have been placed and another 1,800 are undergoing training.

Udaan, on the other hand, aims to train and place 40,000 J&K youth over five years. The scheme is funded by the Ministry of Home Affairs (MHA) and is targeted at graduates and post-graduates, who are trained and placed by corporate partners outside J&K. Corporate commitments to train around 30,500 candidates over five years have already been received and around 700 students are undergoing training with corporates such as TCS, HCL Infosystems, Yes Bank, etc. A website has also been developed for the project by NSDC (Udaan implementation partner) where students can register themselves for training, find information on upcoming programs and apply. The website also has an online solution that helps students prepare for interviews, improve communication skills and provide feedback for improvement.

Similarly, there are several schemes for the benefit of the youth from the North East states. The Capacity Building & Technical Assistance Scheme of the Ministry of Development of North Eastern Region provides funding to North Eastern youth for training in reputed institutions in various parts of the country.

In line with the skill development mission of the Union government, the North East Council based at Shillong - which is the nodal agency for economic and social development of the North Eastern Region - also sponsors many job oriented training programmes to cater to the need of unemployed youth in the field of computer hardware and software, BPO, Hair Style and Beauty Care, Banana Fiber Extraction, Ayurveda Therapist, Hearing Disability sector, adventure sports, CNC technology and Machinery Operation, Plastic Processing and Recycle, Retail Management, Automobile Repairs etc. These programmes are conducted for various levels of educational background including school drop outs that form the majority of unemployed youths.

Special training programmes have also been introduced in Jammu & Kashmir and the North-East by various National Skill Development Corporation partners to ensure that the people living in these parts could obtain the skill sets that would empower them to participate in and contribute to India's growth.

Q. The government has been emphasising on inclusive governance. On this front what are the programs of skill development for disable persons?

SR. We as a country cannot embark on a progress trajectory without inclusion of all sections of the society, including the differently abled.

As an initiative specifically targeted only towards the differently abled citizens, the Department of Disability Affairs has been running skill development programmes oriented towards employability under its Deendayal Disabled Rehabilitation Scheme. Financial assistance (grants) is provided under this scheme to voluntary organizations to make available the whole range of services necessary for rehabilitation of different abled persons. The objectives are to model projects for rehabilitation and Vocational Training Centre is one of the 18 projects supported under the scheme. These projects are meant for differently abled persons in the age group of 15-35 years and are expected to provide skills to enable such persons to move towards economic independence.

In various other schemes being run by other ministries, emphasis is laid on inclusion of all strata of the social spectrum. We also encourage the private sector and other training providers to ensure an inclusive growth agenda in skilling.

Q. Is National Council on Skill Development (NCSDD) focusing on semi urban and rural areas also? Kindly elaborate.

SR. Absolutely. Job creation has to move out of the urban and metro areas, and closer to the smaller towns and rural areas where a majority of our population resides. A number of states are trying to reach out to these populations and skill them for local employment. For example, Chhattisgarh has set up a livelihood college in Dantewada to train the youth in various trades, including the maintenance and repair of local infrastructure such as solar energy equipment, hand pumps etc. Also, there are a number of NGOs engaged in skill development in the rural areas, and we are constantly engaging with them to understand the challenges they are facing, and developing solutions that will enable them to increase their reach and participation in skill development. The Ministry of Rural Development is focusing heavily on skill development through their National Rural Livelihood Mission. In addition, through discussions with various Ministries, we have opened up newer funding sources for skill development - 5% of the Border Area Development Programme funds and 10% of the Special Assistance to the Scheduled Caste sub-plan and the Tribal sub-plan will now be used for skill development. We believe that this will empower the states and districts covered under these programmes to scale-up their activities on vocational training quickly.
