PROMOTING YOUTH EMPLOYMENT THROUGH SKILLS DEVELOPMENT

- Paul Comyn and Sher Verick

Youth unemployment and underemployment is prevalent around the world because young people lack skills, work experience, job search abilities and the financial resources to find employment. In developing countries, this situation is exacerbated by poverty and the competitive pressures that result from a rapidly growing labour force. Moreover, the inadequacy of social protection schemes and active labour market policies means that young people in such economies have little support outside their family and friends. Globally, young people are, therefore, more likely to be either unemployed or employed on more precarious contracts and in the informal sector.

These challenges are prevalent in India, which has the largest youth population in the world with around 66% of the total population being under the age of 35 (representing over 808 million young people). According to 2010 population figures, one in five young people in the world is an Indian. These young people are much more likely to be unemployed: looking at the age group 20-24 living in urban areas in India, 9.7% of young men and 18.7% of young women were unemployed in 2009-10. In comparison, the unemployment rate for Indians aged 30-34 reached only 1.2 and 3.4% for men and women, respectively. While India is experiencing a 'demographic dividend' due to the youth bulge, many young people struggle to acquire the right skills demanded by employers to successfully navigate the transition from school to work. Moreover, with the dependency ratio expected to rise from 2025, India faces a pressing challenge to increase education and skill levels amongst its population to take advantage of this unique moment in its history. However, the scale of India's challenge to improve the skills of its burgeoning labour force is significant. Whilst 12 million people enter the workforce each year, less than 10% have had access to training, and whilst 90% of jobs require vocational training, only 6% of the workforce receives any form of workplace training. For this reason, this article focuses on skills development in India, while also drawing on global findings on more comprehensive approaches to assist marginalized youth.

The imperative for economic growth, combined with concern over the social consequences of failing to offer livelihood opportunities to its large young population, have led the Indian government to invest heavily in skills development and pursue new models to improve the quality and relevance of education and training. The Prime Minister's National Council on Skill Development has set a target of training 500 million skilled individuals by 2022 pursuant to the 2009 National Skill Development Policy (NSDP). The NSDP intends to meet the 2022 target by expanding public institutions in rural areas; using innovative delivery models such as mobile and decentralized delivery; using skill development centres rurally to provide training information, guidance and delivery; involving local municipal bodies (panchayats) and local government in skill delivery mechanisms; improving access to apprenticeships and raising female participation in training by introducing the Women's Vocational Programme. However, a number of significant issues exist which should serve as priorities for on-going efforts to strengthen the skills system in India and promote more and better jobs for young people. Firstly, the skills ecosystem in India remains highly contested. Fragmentation of decision-making is evident at both a national level, where 17 ministries and departments are involved skills development, and at regional level, where a similar breadth of structures and responsibilities exist. Whilst a number of state governments have established their own co-ordination bodies for skills development and vocational education programmes, policy making remains highly fractured with parallel initiatives and duplication of effort not uncommon. Development of a national qualification framework as outlined in the NSDP is a case in point, with both the Ministries of Human Resource Development and Labour & Employment involved in the development of separate

Prisoners across a hostile Border

-Vivek Katju

The Sarabjit Singh incident is a reminder that India and Pakistan must evolve mechanisms for humane treatment of each other's nationals in their custody

The Sarabjit Singh incident is a reminder that we need to establish a humane and forward looking mechanism for treating Indian and Pakistani nationals in each other's custody. Though it is not going to be easy, we need to move in this direction. But first the Sarabjit matter.

The Pakistani authorities did well to immediately order an enquiry regarding the assault on Sarabjit at the Kot Lakhpal jail in Lahore. They have also booked two prisoners for the attack and suspended some jail officials for negligence. There was no reflexive prevarication on their part of the kind that continues to be seen in the Chamel Singh case. A credible enquiry should be conducted expeditiously and transparent action taken against the accused as well as the jail officials concerned. The quick clearance of visas for Sarabjit's family was also a positive step. It will be a pity if the Pakistani establishment allows entrenched negative approaches take over this good beginning and now undertake a cover-up.

All this action, of course, cannot absolve Pakistan from a clear failure to protect Sarabjit especially when there was an obvious threat to his life after the Ajmal Kasab and Alzal Guru executions. Given the media attention that the Sarabjit case had attracted, they should have known that an incident of this kind would, at a minimum, give rise to misgivings, if not generate stronger feelings among many Indians. It is also not unnatural for many in India to feel that the attack was either inspired by a section of officials or the Jihadi groups. These views also arise as the wounds of the Mumbai attack have not healed. However, Track II interactions between retired Indian and Pakistani offi-

Indians towards their country.

Making distinctions

Questions need to be asked also if sufficiently high-level demarches were made with the Pakistanis both in Delhi and in Islamabad on the need to provide full security to Sarabjit in the present circumstances. It would be wrong to make this a political issue but with India already in almost an election mode, it is hardly possible that the Opposition would let the opportunity slip by. It would be too much to ask that the political class looks at the system of dealing with prisoners but that is what is truly required. And now to the general issue of treatment of prisoners.

It is necessary to distinguish between terrorists and ordinary prisoners. Terrorists cannot expect to be treated as those charged with other crimes, including espionage. While the law must be applied to them impartially, national security has to be kept in mind while dealing with their cases. In cases of ordinary prisoners and fishermen, information flows regarding arrests of each other's nationals, consular access and establishment of national identities of those who do not have papers have all to be speeded up. Above all, the focus has to be on the early repatriation of those who have completed their sentences.

Acting defensively

In the normal course, such prisoners should be handed over to the respective High Commissions to be sent back home. It is here that the peculiar nature of the India-Pakistan relationship comes in. Diplomats of the two countries act defensively. They are aware that the law prescribes that those whose sentences are over cannot be kept in and they would be blamed by their own people for being naive, if not worse. The Supreme Court has directed that those whose identities have not been accepted by Pakistan should be taken out of jail and lodged in detention centres where they not treated as prisoners. This is a good but insufficient step.

It would be helpful if the oversight of the fishermen and the prisoners issue is given to the National Human Rights Commission on the Indian side and a similarly empowered body on the Pakistani side. They can evolve mechanisms in consultation with the two-governments to ensure fishermen are sent back speedily and that cases of other prisoners are dealt with humanely and speedily. Those involved in terrorist cases should be left out from the purview of these cases. If necessary, the two countries can enact laws to empower the commissions where required.

From Iran to Lahore

Here, it is worth recalling an incident to show why empowered human rights commissions would be the right agencies to handle the issue. In the mid-1990s, a European nun living in Lahore contacted the Indian High Commission in Islamabad to convey that two Indian men around 20 years old were with her. One was from Mumbai while the other from Jharkhand. She said that they were sailors on a UAE vessel which had sunk off the Iranian coast.

They were rescued by the Iranians, who after keeping them in custody for some months, had pushed them into Baluchistan from where they made their way to Lahore. (This was not the only case where the

into custody.

The next day's papers carried stories about the arrest of two R&AW agents in Islamabad. The men were tried and sentenced to about three years imprisonment. The mother of the young man from Mumbai was a widow and he was her only child. She used to visit the Foreign Office often. The Ministry's efforts to convince Pakistani diplomats about the genuineness of the case did not cut any ice. Finally, the men were released after serving their sentences. The mother brought her son to Delhi to thank officials and he had this story to tell.

In addition to the two sailors, there were three others who were on the vessel and all five were pushed into Baluchistan by the Iranians. They came to Lahore by train and left the station in two tongas. The tongas got separated and the two who were in one tonga panicked. The Mumbai man who was a Christian suggested that they go seek the help of a church where they met the nun.

The other three went to Karachi from Lahore where they went to the port area and met some seamen. They convinced them of their bonafides and the Pakistani seamen decided to help them on the condition that they would never share what had happened with any Indian official. The three were smuggled onto a ship sailing to Mumbai and they reached home. The Mumbai man had met them on reaching India.

The story was fascinating and this writer expressed a desire to meet them only to hear it at first hand but the three kept the promise they had made to their Pakistani comrades of the sea. They contacted no Indian official.

Nicholas Piramal, Wockhardt Limited, GlaxoSmithKline, Indian Immunologicals Limited, Nuziveedu Seeds, Reliance Life Sciences, Rasi Seeds, Novo Nordisk, Shantha Biotechnics and Mahyco. Apart from these, there are many academic institutions that promote research studies and many education institutes offering various undergraduate, postgraduate and diploma courses in biotechnology.

Making a career in biotechnology is a wise option as there are many areas in which its application is seen. Biotechnology finds its application in medicine, agriculture and industries using bioproducts and biofuels among others. The application of biotechnology is in developing new varieties of seeds, pesticides and fertilisers, improving livestock breeds, finding new methods for curing various genetically inherited diseases and in enzyme manufacturing units. Biotechnologists can seek employment in leading Indian or multi-national companies. Opportunities are available in government research and development organisations also. Some job roles available in this field are research scientist, research associate, marketing personnel, business development officer, sales representative, biotech engineer and lab technician. Biotechnology is a research-oriented field. So, most of the work is carried out at research institutes and laboratories.

In the domain of R & D, skilled personnel are required to work in faculties like protein chemistry, purification, molecular biology, strain development, tissue culture and bacteriological expertise. For these roles, candidates with Ph.D and experience are preferred. In the area of Operations, the requirement is in areas of pharmacy, microbiology, biochemistry, engineering and analytical chemistry. These jobs require basic knowledge of the subject. Graduates and postgraduates in the relevant subjects are suitable for these roles.

To make a successful career as a biotechnologist, the basic requirement is to be keenly interested in biological sciences. One should have a methodical approach coupled with analytical skills. Apart from these, one should be able to use computers with ease and have a flair for laboratory work. Enthusiasts in biotech can take up research-oriented work or that related to production and marketing.

Biotechnology is one of the most dynamic disciplines in the field of science and technology. Biotechnology applies biological knowledge coupled with the principles related to molecular, cellular and genetic processes and techniques to manufacture or revise products or processes for specific use. In simple terms, it is manipulation of behaviour of living organisms to produce desired products. This discipline of science closely associates with various other fields such as microbiology, biochemistry, genetics, pharmacology and bio-informatics.

In India, there is tremendous growth in the field of biotechnology creating a vast impact on the economy. According to market research reports, India ranks third in Asia and finds place in the top 20 countries globally with respect to biotech industry. In addition to the knowledge and skills, the government support and cost-effective policies indicate that there is immense potential for growth in the industry in the years to come. This is drawing many Indian and global companies to set up biotech companies in India, opening up a plethora of opportunities for those keen to be associated with this sector. There is ample scope for manufacturing and research wings as well.

Biopharmaceuticals, bioservices, bio-agriculture, bioinformatics and bio-industrial sectors come under the horizon of biotechnology. While biopharmaceuticals deal with vaccines and drugs, bioinformatics deals with the creation and maintenance of vast electronic databases. Bio-agriculture includes bio-pesticides and bio-fertilisers and bio-industrial sector comprises food, leather, textiles, and other industries that use enzymes. This explains the diverse nature of this unique field and the umpteen career options that accompany it.

Of all these sectors, there is a lot of scope for growth in biopharmaceuticals. This can be attributed to increasing awareness in the area of disease prevention and various research outcomes in the field of medicine. The other major sector is bio-agriculture. Many seed companies in India today are engaged in the production of Bt cotton hybrid varieties. With more number of players entering clinical research, the bio-services sector is also growing at a rapid pace.

Some of the companies that have made a mark in biotechnology are Biocon, Serum Institute of India, Panacea Biotech,

PROMOTING YOUTH EMPLOYMENT...

frameworks. Given the urgent need for institutions to fulfil a leadership role, further activism by the office of the Prime Minister's Advisor on Skills Development and the National Skills Development Coordination Board will hopefully bring more coherence to policy and programmes in the skills domain, although the challenges of inter-agency coordination, especially at the local level, will not be easily resolved. The planned strengthening of the National Council for Vocational Training (NCVT), as envisaged under the NSDP, may improve inter-ministerial coordination, especially if the Coordination Board uses the NCVT as an independent apex body to monitor and support enhanced governance and coordination of the system.

Secondly, as noted by the Planning Commission, the 'sheer magnitude of scale' and 'duplicated or excessive bureaucracy' are serious challenges to improving the quality and relevance of education and training in India. Interventions and investment are required to address deficiencies in delivery and assessment methods, curricula and resource materials and infrastructure as well as the general lack of participation of the private sector and industry. Whilst the National Skills Development Corporation (NSDC) has made progress in engaging industry through formation of Sector Skills Councils (SSC), industry participation to date has not included worker organisations as an equal industry partner. Whilst SSC have the potential to markedly increase the relevance of training delivered in the skill system, they will take time to become established as lead organisations and to complete development of sector specific standards assessment and certification frameworks for their industries. The emerging institutional arrangements including SSC and a institutions such as AICTE and CBSE are considered in the context of a new national qualification framework.

Thirdly, the capacity of the skills system to respond to these challenges is, however, severely hampered by the looming shortage of teachers and trainers. The NSDC predicts 12,000 trainers must be trained annually for posts in Industrial Training Institutes (ITIs) and Industrial Training Centres (ITCs), with a further 27,000 required in other vocational areas. Given the current and planned public sector capacity for training of trainers is less than 5,000 places a year, and that little additional capacity exists in the private sector, the shortage of trainers is set to develop into a critical constraint on the supply of skills in the short term. Nationally consistent certification and accreditation systems for teachers and trainers linked to institutional and program quality assurance arrangements are not in place which has meant a large number of trainers are uncertified and untrained, especially in the private sector. There is an urgent need to develop and implement a national strategy to address this constraint so that all government agencies and ministries, alongside targeted private public partnerships, can increase the recruitment, training and certification of teachers and trainers that meet minimum technical standards so that the planned increase in training capacity can be realised.

Fourthly, whilst the Indian apprenticeship system is well established and supported by legislative and administrative arrangements that span several decades, by international standards, it is underutilised, with inadequate incentives for employers, and insufficient structure and resources to support quality vocational outcomes. The NSDP recognises the need to expand and strengthen both the formal and informal apprenticeship systems and considered

Commission Review of apprenticeships has led to a series of proposed changes to the Apprenticeship Act (1961) and Apprenticeship Rules (1992), anecdotal evidence suggests that many key stakeholders believe the proposed changes are mainly cosmetic and avoid the need for a more thorough and internationally relevant review of the apprenticeship system.

Finally, the need for more useful labour market information (LMI) for skills anticipation has also been recognized and is a clearly identified priority in the NSDP. Whilst an initial environmental scan of data on the supply and demand for skills has been undertaken by the ILO with the active participation of constituents, further work is required to develop a national data model that outlines SSC responsibilities for sectoral analysis and gives greater clarity on institutional arrangements, including the role of labour exchanges. Without a clearer understanding of the type of skills required in which sectors, a closer match between supply and demand will not reduce the potential for growing youth unemployment.

Helping marginalized youth through comprehensive approaches: insights from the Joven programmes of Latin America

While skills development has a crucial role to play in enhancing the school-to-work transition, there are other factors that hinder youth in their quest to acquire employment, particularly among marginalized groups. In this regard, more comprehensive approaches that target specific youth have proven to be successful in a number of regions.

The Joven ('youth' in Spanish) programmes of Latin America are a well-known and much researched example of such a comprehensive approach. Starting in Chile in 1992, Joven programmes have since been established in Argentina, Colombia, the Dominican Republic, Panama, Paraguay, Peru and Venezuela.

labour market. Many beneficiaries are school drop-outs. The key feature of these programmes is the combination of short-term technical training and internships with employers, supplemented by life skills training and other support services. The training is demand-driven and provided through a competitive process, while the internships offer a direct link to the workplace. For example, in the case of the Colombian Joven programme, which operated between 2001 and 2005, youth received a training allowance and vouchers that were redeemable with a list of competitively-selected training providers. Evaluations of the various Joven programmes have shown that they are effective in increasing both the probability of employment and earnings for young beneficiaries. For example, studies on the Chilean Joven programme, which has assisted around 165,000 young people, reveal that participation in the scheme increased the likelihood of employment by 21 percentage points and earnings by 26%. These results are most significant for young people aged 21 and younger. In conclusion, while broad-based skills development is crucial, these initiatives should be supplemented by specific programmes that provide comprehensive packages that target the most vulnerable and disadvantaged youth. This in turn requires developing the right institutions and ability to deliver such programmes at the local level. Given the myriad of programmes and institutions that exist at the national, state and district levels in India, the integration of service provision to deliver complementary services to young people seems to provide the greatest chance of ensuring India's demographic dividend does not diverge into the oft quoted demographic disaster.

DPP-2013 to Boost India's self-reliance in Arms

DPP-2013 backs indigenous defence industry; provides a level playing field between govt and private companies. The Defence Acquisition Council (DAC), the apex decision-making body of the Ministry of Defence (MoD), has revised the Defence Procurement Procedure (DPP) that details the process for buying defence equipment for the military. MoD announced that the new policy, DPP-2013, has the twin objectives of "infusing greater efficiency in the procurement process and strengthening the defence manufacturing base in the country". DPP-2013 goes beyond the earlier DPPs of 2002, 2005, 2006, 2008 and 2011 in explicitly backing indigenous defence industry. It stipulates that Indian defence companies will get access to the military's long-term equipment road map, providing them with the time needed for developing the equipment that the military needs in the future; provides a level playing field between the defence public sector undertakings (DPSUs) and the private defence companies; simplifies the 'buy & make (Indian)' procedure to benefit Indian industry; and defines ambiguous terms in the DPP like 'indigenous content'. DPP-2013 stipulates the 'categorisation' of each procurement case should favour indigenisation, with equipment being bought internationally only if developing and building in India proves impossible. 'Categorisation' is a key decision in each acquisition project, in which MoD decides whether the equipment should be developed and built in India ('buy Indian' and 'make' categories); or built in India by an indigenous consortium ('buy & make Indian'); or built in India with transfer of technology ('buy & make with ToT'); or bought over the counter from a foreign vendor ('buy global').

The MoD announcement says DPP-2013 "provides for a preferred order of categorisation, with global cases being a choice of last resort. The order of preference, in decreasing order, shall be: (1) 'buy (Indian)'; (2) 'buy & make (Indian)'; (3) 'make'; (4) 'buy & make with ToT'; and (5) 'buy (global)'. Any proposal to select a particular category must now state reasons for excluding the higher preferred

Perspective and Capability Road map" (TPCR) against LTIPP 2012-2027. The TPCR will provide useful guidance to the Indian defence industry for boosting its infrastructural capabilities and directing its R&D and technology investments." Besides finalising DPP-2013, DAC also clarified important issues relating to defence licensing. A 'defence items list' has been finalised and sent to the Department ogy transferred to the Indian defence industry may not be secure. DAC finalised 'draft security guidelines' that will be circulated for consultations with stakeholders, including licensed defence industries. MoD says: "A complete security framework for Indian private industries participating in defence cases will be in place in the near future."

MoD also cleared a keenly anticipated mechanism for providing micro, small and medium scale enterprises (MSMEs) with funds for developing defence equipment. According to MoD, "Siddhi has decided to earmark an amount of Rs 500 crore for providing loans (to defence MSMEs), and further, a fund of Rs 50 crore for equity support out of 'India Opportunities Fund' managed by its subsidiary, namely, Siddhi Venture Capital Ltd." DPP-2013 goes a long way towards addressing longstanding demands of the Indian defence industry, particularly the private sector. Separately, in a bid to speed up financial sanctions for capital procurement, DAC has tripled the financial powers of the army, navy, air force and coast guard chiefs from the current Rs 50 crore to Rs 150 crore. Finally, after a succession of arms procurement scandals, most recently around the procurement of AgustaWestland VVIP helicopters, Defence Minister AK Antony has divested himself of discretionary powers to approve deviations from DPP. Henceforth, only DAC will have this power.

category/categories". MoD has also granted a longstanding request by private defence companies for access to the military's 15-year Long-Term Integrated Perspective Plan (LTIPP), so that they have the lead time needed to meet future equipment needs. MoD said: "DAC has approved the release of a public version of its 15-year perspective document (LTIPP), outlining the 'Technology of Industrial Policy and Promotion (DIPP, under the commerce ministry). An explicit list of defence items will clarify which items actually need a defence licence. MoD has also informed DIPP that dual-use items (with civil as well as military applications) will not require licences. DAC has also allayed apprehensions among foreign vendors and governments that information, documents and technol-

'INDIA-CHINA BORDER AREAS CONTINUE TO REMAIN PEACEFUL'

[The following write up is based on excerpts from a media briefing by Mr. Syed Akbaruddin, Joint Secretary and Spokesperson, Ministry of External Affairs, on the Sino-Indian standoff in New Delhi on 23 April 2013.]

The external affairs minister has said that India is addressing the issue of incursion by China 'in an appropriate manner' and that 'we do not want any departure from proportionality'. Could you please define proportionality? Is incursion of a platoon strength contingent of the Chinese army or indeed any foreign army inside 10 km of the territory proportionately speaking a small matter? What is proportionality in this case?

Your question addresses the military aspects but let me try and address what we have done so far and how we pursue this incident because I think that would be more appropriate for me as the spokesperson of the Ministry of External Affairs to answer, and I think you will have a reasonably good idea of how we are approaching this entire issue. The ongoing incident refers to an incident in the Depsang area of the western sector of the India-China boundary. We see this as a face-to-face situation between border personnel of the two sides due to differences on the alignment of the Line of Actual Control. We have, therefore, asked the Chinese side to maintain status quo in this sector, and by status quo I mean status quo prior to this incident.

The term face-to-face situation is not something that we have conjured up. It is something that is referred to in the 2005 Protocol for the Implementation of Confidence Building Measures (CBMs) in the military field along the Line of Actual Control in the India-China border areas. Let me just refer to the specific article in this. It is Article 4 of that protocol and it reads as follows: "If the border personnel of the two sides come to a face-to-face situation due to differences on the Line of Actual Control, they shall exercise self-restraint and take all necessary steps to avoid an escalation of the situation". Then there is a whole listing of procedures that need to be followed. Therefore, when we say face-to-face situation this is what we are referring to.

Now, the ongoing incident in the Depsang area of the Western Sector of the India-China Boundary is a localised event. This is a sector in which there are differing perceptions of the Line of Actual Control. That is why we have, since 1996, been maintaining that there is a need for both sides to work together in clarifying and confirming the Line of Actual Control. What steps have been taken since this incident occurred? Those of you who have been following this are aware that this came to note on April 15. On April 16 morning, Joint Secretary (East Asia), who chairs the working mechanism for consultation and coordination on India-China border affairs, spoke to his counterpart who is the director-general border affairs of the Chinese Ministry of Foreign Affairs. This was on April 16 morning. Subsequently, on April 18 morning there was a flag meeting. Following that, on April 18 evening the foreign secretary expressed the concerns of the government of India to the Ambassador of China in Delhi.

There has been a flag meeting. I hope you are able to understand what the situation in technical terms is and what we have done. Let me also try and clarify that overall, the India-China border areas continue to remain peaceful. We believe that this ongoing incident can be handled on the basis of agreements between the two countries and through mechanisms established under those agreements to resolve such situations peacefully. I hope I have clarified to a large extent without getting into the technical details because I do not think I am competent to respond to the technical details of situations on the border.

Has India sent any additional troops to the area to meet any eventuality?

It has been our experience that similar incidents in the past have been resolved peacefully and we hope to resolve this incident, too, peacefully. So, please, on issues relating to other than peaceful means, you may like to address other appropriate organs which deal with this.

Since this is the first opportunity for an on-the-record statement, can we have a factual narration of what has happened as there have been differing reports on how deep inside are the Chinese troops, what are the numbers of the Chinese troops, and what sort of structures they have raised there in that place?

Again as I said, my job is to interact and discuss this at a diplomatic level. There are others in the government of India, who you are well aware of, who may be able to provide you that information.

The Chinese Foreign Ministry said they had not trespassed into Indian territory. How would you respond to that? Also, is there any effort to look at this politically and reach out to them at a political level and not just at the diplomatic level?

As I said, I think we need to go through very carefully the mechanisms and agreements that we have on this issue bilaterally. Let me try and put to you one of the agreements which will indicate about differing perceptions. This is Article 10 of the 1996 Agreement on Confidence Building Measures in the Military Field along the Line of Actual Control in the India-China Border Areas. Article 10 states as follows: "The two sides agree to speed up the process of clarification and confirmation of the Line of Actual Control". As an initial step in this process, they are clarifying the alignment of the Line of Actual Control in those segments where they have different perceptions. This is a written document which should be available publicly. All we are saying is that in our perception or in our view or in our approach, we see this as a situation of differing perceptions; this is based on agreements and mechanisms that we have established; we have activated those mechanisms based on our understanding of what the situation is and what the agreements between the two countries provide for.
