CENSUS: 2001-2011 Literacy on the rise and sex ratio better

[Following write-up is some of the salient features of the Primary Census Abstract-Data of Census 2011 which was recently released]

This is one slump in growth rate that the nation can rejoice over. According to Census 2001-2011, India's population has grown at 17.7 per cent as against 21.5 per cent in the previous decade. The country's population at present is 1.21 billion, an increase of 181.96 million since 2001. What is even more comforting for the country's planners is the fact that female growth rate has been better than male growth rate. The male population has gone up by 90.97 million, against a rise of 90.99 in the population of females over the last 10 years. The rate of growth of the female population is 18.3 per cent, while the male growth rate stands at 17.1 per cent.

Rural rules

While there has been a 3.8 per cent drop in the overall growth rate, there is still scope for improvement as 14 states and Union Territories have registered over 20 per cent growth in population figures. Among the major states, Bihar has recorded the highest decadal growth in population (25.4 per cent), surpassing West Bengal, which occupied the first position in 1991-2001.

More than two-thirds of the country's population lives in rural areas. As per Census 2011, 833.5 million people live in rural areas, while 377.1 million people live in urban centres. Delhi has the highest proportion of urban population at 97.5 per cent. Top five states in terms of urban population are Goa (62.2 per cent), Mizoram

(52.1 per cent), Tamil Nadu (48.4 per cent), Kerala (47.7 per cent) and Maharashtra (45.2 per cent). Literacy rate in India has risen to 73 per cent in comparison to 64.8 per cent in 2001. While male literacy rate stands at 80.9 per cent, which is 5.6 per cent higher than the previous census, the female literacy rate has been recorded at 64.6 per cent, an increase of 10.9 per cent since 2001. The gap in literacy rate between urban and rural areas and between males and females has also declined. In Census 2011, the gap stands at 16.3 points.

India's sex ratio in 2011 stands at 943 (females against 1000 males), which is 10 per cent more than the last census, when it was 933. Haryana has the worst sex ratio at 879, while Kerala is the best at 1,084.

For 1st time, urban areas pip villages in job creation

-Subodh Varma

Afascinating, but worrying, picture of the way common Indians are earning their living emerges from recently released Census 2011 data. Urban areas have emerged as huge magnets for jobs, for the first time beating the rural hinterland in job creation in the past decade. Simultaneously there is a rising dependence on short-term jobs, both in rural and urban areas, as regular full-term jobs fade away. The data also reveals huge differences in the kind of jobs men and women are getting. Clearly, India is going through a churning process, which will have far reaching effects on living standards, job related migration and gender relations.

More than half of the total 8 crore jobs created, between 2001 and 2011 were located in urban areas, although the population staying in cities and towns is just a third of the total. This is a direct result of migration of people from unproductive farming in search of better prospects, supplemented by more areas getting defined as urban.

In the urban areas, women's employment has seen a massive jump of over 74% since 2001, compared to just 38% for men. Women's employment increased by over 1.2 crore in urban areas.

But the most significant feature is the creeping marginalization of jobs. Over 3 crore of the new jobs created in the past decade - 40% of the total - have been designated as 'marginal'. This means that people work in these jobs for less than six months. A quarter of India's 40-crore workforce is now subsisting on such marginal work.

While cultivation as the main occupation has declined by about 8% over the past decade, among marginal workers the picture is totally different. It has increased by 35% among male marginal workers, but declined by 20% among women. Seen in the context of the huge decline in main cultivators, it appears that men have been forced to work part time in their fields and part time either in others' as agricultural labour or even in other kinds of work.

There appears to be a distinct shift towards what the census still persists in calling 'other' work - industry and services. And the vast bulk of these jobs are being created in cities and towns. Main workers in 'other' work jumped by 38% over the past decade compared to a meagre 10% increase in rural areas. This is not surprising as most industries and service related jobs are located in urban or peri-urban areas (areas adjoining urban areas). Even here, the share of short-term workers in these 'other' jobs increased by a jaw dropping 84%.

Ability Brings Employment

IMPROVING SELF RELIANCE AND EMPLOYABILITY

-Prof Prabhat Ranjan

A worth of an individual in society is measured by the value they bring to family/society etc. For persons with severe disability, this can be severely affected due to lack of physical ability. However with the help of newer technological developments within India, we can make them much more self-reliant as well as improve their employability. This makes a big impact on their quality of life as well as the way society treats them.

The author of this article has received many awards for his work in disability sector. He is also the recipient of NCPEDP-Mphasis Universal Design Award.

Technological advances keep taking place all the time. However most of these are focused on those, who are already comfortable (e.g. Those having full physical abilities or younger in age as well as having disposable income). This is more so for a country like ours, which is low on economic affordability. However, I would like to discuss some of the technological development, I have been involved with, to make it easier for differently abled persons to communicate, access computer, be able to operate other electronic/electrical equipment (e.g. TV, Light, Fan etc)

Normally one of the first issue that is faced in the case of persons with severe disabilities is to decide how to take information from a person about what he/she intends to do. If they have nearly full functional hands, they can easily do this since most of our systems depend on the use of hands to give input. In certain cases, legs could also be used if hands are not functional. However in many cases lower limbs do not function if upper limbs are not functional, (e.g. spinal cord injury). In our work, we have developed mechanism to take input from severely disabled persons in three different ways : (1) Touch Screen (2) Hand gesture and (3) Brainwave and head movement. We are in the process of developing other options as well.

The next aspect that has to be seen is how to connect these inputs with what user wants to do. We have developed few possibilities right now: (1) Access computer (2) Communicate specially in non-verbal cases (3) Control environment through speech synthesis (5) Operate simple mechanical systems etc. These can be immediately extended to cover those possibilities, which lead to employment of the persons e.g. Being able to operate a simple machine such as drilling machine or security gate etc. We describe each of these possibilities in more detail later.

We first start by discussing about the possibilities of taking input from a user, with severe disability.

- Hand gesture : Here a small device is strapped to hand/wrist, which monitors the hand movement using accelerometer in two directions : Up/Down, Left/Right. It also detects taps by user. This information can be used as input from the user. By allowing user to change modes of operation by double tapping hand, one can extend the number of systems that can be operated through this. Using this we have developed interface to operate TV, Light, Fan, Computer etc. This system supports up to four different equipment at one time.

In yester years, journalism was not much beyond "reporting events". Today, the scenario is drastically different. The visual form of news reporting is the current trend of journalism. Visual journalism is the happening field and presents you with an exciting career. In fact, the media, be it print media or electronic media, cannot do without visual journalism if it has to make an impact. Presenting information with the aid of words and images and thus connecting to people - readers or viewers - is the chief aim of visual journalism. Visual journalists work closely with reporters and editors. Through visual journalism, the readers or viewers come face-to-face with the story about an event. It is a well-known and proven fact that a visual has a more appealing effect than a normal wordy news item. Newspapers, magazines, television, films and the internet come under the sphere of visual journalism. It covers services like reporting, writing, caricatures, digital video, web-based communication and multi-cable environment. Crucial information and clues drawn from the info-graphic drawings help in reporting authentic news.

Academic foundation

The knowledge and skills required to pursue career as visual journalist can be obtained through courses in visual communications, photo journalism, mass communications and journalism. Courses in these disciplines are available at Diploma, Bachelor's and Master's levels. The eligibility criteria are 10 + 2 for diploma and bachelor's courses and graduation for Master's degree. These courses are offered by various institutions in India. The courses focus equally on artistic, technical and business aspects of visual journalism.

Animation, multimedia, web design, graphic design, filming and photography are just a few among the plethora of topics covered in the courses. The others include computer graphics, digital audio and video technology, lighting, and script and news writing. On completing these courses, the aspirants will have both theoretical and practical knowledge and will be able to handle the equipment, processes and techniques with equal ease. Here, an important point to note is that today, as a journalist, you should possess multiple skill sets. So, apart from specialising in visual journalism, picking up skills in areas like reporting, editing and using related technology, will be an added advantage for you. With such skills, you will be able to weave a story around your visuals, give your information a form and make it ready for broadcast/ publishing.

Personality Traits

To succeed as a visual journalist, you should develop some personality traits. Curiosity and creativity are top among them. You got to be curious to know what is happening around you and what in it is newsworthy. You should be creative enough to design or shoot pictures that would transport the audience directly to the heart of the story!

Apart from these, patience and perseverance are other qualities that would place you in an advantageous position. Accepting criticism and willingness to rework help you face the stiff competition in this unique field. Besides understanding the ethical standards, being committed to and maintaining the same are paramount for any visual journalist. Abstaining from using fictional and manipulated images and presenting the news stories in an appealing manner are the skills that give a visual journalist an edge over others.

Career opportunities

Visual journalism offers you an exciting career in photo journalism, graphic designing, report writing, video editing pertaining to traditional print or video newsrooms or the present World Wide Web. To be more precise, areas such as magazines and newspapers both online and print, advertising agencies, broadcast stations, film production companies, government and public relations agencies and photo agencies present lucrative career opportunities. Or you can choose to stay independent, working as a freelancer.

Before you enter the job market, you should prepare a strong portfolio that showcases your talent. Take up internship, apprenticeship or part-time work to gain work experience.

Some roles visual journalists can assume are photo journalist, publishing manager, art director, television news producer and cameraman for television news.

Remuneration and rewards

Remuneration for a fresh graduate can range between Rs. 12,000 to Rs. 20,000 per month. Media industry provides tremendous potential for growth for those who can stand out from the crowd. The job involves traveling to different places and facing challenges. But at the end of the day, it also provides great deal of professional satisfaction.

Interview preparation

To face any job interview, preparation involves being thorough with the subject, developing good communication skills and producing a set of certificates for verification and submission. However, for appearing for a job interview in the field of visual journalism, suitably edited video clippings and technically designed slideshows apart from a skillfully compiled portfolio of images is essential. This will make the prospective employers have a clear understanding of your skill set and creativity. Besides full-time jobs, there is scope for part-time jobs and internships too.

The salaries vary with the specialisation, experience and the domain. The one thing that is certain is the variety and the excitement that the field is going to offer you each day.

WHEN CHIT FUNDS ARE LEGIT, AND HOW CHEATS THRIVE ON CONCEPT

-Subhomoy Bhattacharjee explains how prize chits work, and why they are tough to regulate

How does a chit fund work?

Operating a chit fund is not illegal. The concept is almost unique to India and till recently, when banks were rarer, it was the most acceptable way to get bulk cash for millions of households looking to finance a marriage or buy a house. For such families, chit funds are also an introduction to organised finance outside the family circle.

A chit fund at the basic level is simple: members gather at periodic intervals to pool in their savings and a lottery determines who will get the pool. The winner drops out of the lottery but is obliged to keep on contributing to the pool as well as repay the sum at an agreed interest. The interest earned is divided among all members as their profit.

Economists agree such funds play a vital role in supporting poor families. Micro-finance institutions use these to set up self-help groups. The initial capital often comes from the institution; the group rolls it over and adds to it overtime.

Do fraud schemes work on the same model?

Pyramid schemes or prize chits borrow from elements of both chit funds and direct selling to mislead members. Direct selling of consumer goods by companies, too, is a legal business. Companies encourage individuals to become direct sellers, whom they provide their goods on credit or cash as inventory. The seller in turn recruits members to buy the goods periodically and sometimes to sell farther down the line. Countries set limits on how much inventory a company can offer a seller, and licensing requirements for becoming one.

How do the cheats work?

They have used a wide range of tricks, but all of them bank on three principles. First, unlike a legitimate chit fund or a thrift and credit society, they promise the members they will get rich quickly. Second, they play on the relative poverty and vulnerability of the target population. Third, they hold up the success of plain vanilla chit funds or direct selling schemes to trap the gullible into believing they have signed up for these.

motors use the money raised to put into projects that have no relation to the purpose for which they were raised; even when invested in the promised segments, they could never generate the returns promised. Pyramid schemes need a regular to promote direct selling is with the Ministry of Consumer Affairs. As a result, no entity in the central government has the mandate to keep out the rogues. For instance, since pyramid schemes run close to money laundering, the Enforcement Directorate shares some responsibility. Similarly, since there is the issue of raising of public deposits, RBI permission is required. And finally, as arms of these entities often tap equity or bond markets, SEBI too is involved. At the state level, it is the Directorate of Economic Offences that has the executive authority to use the police to carry out the raids. As a result, the promoters often shop for regulators and often succeed.

What has states' experience been like?

Before the current scandal in West Bengal, many states have been hit at some stage. In May 2011, a rash of dubious direct selling companies emerged in Manipur, while in June Kerala saw a mushrooming of the same. In Rajasthan, gold was the bait that trapped investors, while Delhi was scarred by plantation schemes. In Uttar Pradesh, illegal bonds were used to lure investors, especially in the eastern districts.

Most states have responded with here-and-now models but the best response has been from Kerala. The state government has not only set up a public sector company to guide chit fund operations but also passed a law for direct selling. This means an investor has simply to check up if a company is registered as a direct seller or not to make up her mind. West Bengal has no such option. It has been bombarded by the fraud company's registrations, such as under the Societies Act or under the Companies Act. Those registrations mean nothing but the state has no better alternative to fall back on.

'Need to regulate chit fund companies'

The Union Finance Ministry has stressed the need to regulate chit fund companies. "There is a need to regulate chit funds in some manner. How that will be done is not something I can say now, because there is no decision on it," said Economic Affairs Secretary Arvind Mayaram. He added the government was discussing the issue and exploring ways to regulate these companies. Recently, Sudipta Sen, promoter of Kolkata-based chit fund Saradha Group, was arrested for an alleged financial fraud in West Bengal. The group had been raising deposits from the public with a promise to double the investment within a short period. Mayaram said state governments should improve their oversight on chit funds, since these companies were governed by state governments. "One problem that is quite evident is state governments don't have departments to specifically focus on chit fund activity," he said.

How does one spot a cheat?

The surest sign is the high rate of return promised. In Bengal, the companies promised investors returns of at least 15 per cent when banks have struggled to give anything above 8 per cent. Pyramid schemes also insist that subscribers get new members. In some cases, they soften it by asking for an informal introduction to new members. But unlike a legal direct selling scheme, there is no sale or purchase of products. Along with the high return, that should warn the potential investor they will be fooled.

What are these investments supposed to be in?

To deflect the attention of regulators, these schemes often hold up promised investments from the funds in a range of projects that can be bizarre. In the mid-nineties, North India was flush with plans to invest in plantations. Promoters have also thought up investments from emu farms in Tamil Nadu to real estate. The pro-dose of new investors to keep themselves solvent. To keep the scheme going, they need the fresh cash from new investors to pay off the older ones. Typically, then, the early entrants remain happy and spread the word about the soundness of the scheme. Trouble begins as the numbers of investors increases, which means more money is needed to make the repayment, and when the economy enters a downturn. The stream of fresh investors dwindles and the run on cash begins.

How effective is the law against such schemes?

The central government's Prize Chits and Money Circulation (Banning) Act, 1978, has two flaws. The first is that the administrative power under the central Act lies with the state governments; at the Centre, the authority for policing the sector is diffuse. Again, the Act is administered by the department of financial services in the finance ministry, but the authority product has brought many touch screen based system to market as mobile phones/tablets etc. In particular Android based system from multiple vendors have brought the price line so low that for Indian economic condition, they have become very affordable. Users with even slight finger/hand movement can use the touch screen to provide intended input very easily without much strain. Through a start up company, now we have interfaced touch screen systems to control environment around them as well as computer etc.

- Brainwave input : In many cases, person has absolutely no movement in hands or legs. This happens in cases of Spinal Cord Injury, Muscular Dystrophy and many other disease. In such cases the above two input devices cannot be used. For such purpose, we took advantage of recent development of cheap and easier to use neuro-headsets using which one can monitor brainwaves (EEG signals). These neuro-headsets have been developed for playing computer games and due to that they are very user friendly compared to traditional EEG diagnostic built in gyro-sensor to provide information about head movement.

Based on these inputs, one can make user perform various tasks desired by him/her. We are giving possibilities of some such tasks:

- Television - Now a days this is essential for improving the quality of life of many persons with disability, who are not able to control the remote control of TV due to restricted finger movement or any other reasons. As long as TV has remote control support, our system do no need any modification on TV side or buying a new TV set.
- Set Top Box - Since many houses now use Set Top Box, where control of channel is built in the box rather than TV, we also support controlling Set Top Box of various popular brands. Normally in such cases channel on the TV is fixed but volume can be changed either at TV or Box. We provide facility to change both of these, in addition to being able to put on/off both devices.
- Light/Fan - Since these do not come with remote control facility, we provide a low cost remote control as an external unit or built in our system itself. In addition to being able to put on/off, we can also regulate the speed of fan one light and one fan but this can be increased to cover more light points.

- Computer - For many users familiar with computer use, this has become an essential tool. It can be used to learn through e-books as well as online learning through Internet. Many users do not have the capability to turn pages of books, which becomes very easy once they are able to control computer. This also acts as communication device through access to email/social networking etc. Being able to see employment opportunity, read news papers, be aware of technological advances etc are many area, where access to computer becomes very handy. To make this possible, we provide a low cost IR control unit for computer. In the case of Brainwave based input system, it connects to computer through wireless link and uses head movements/eye blink etc to operate computer. This is flexible to accommodate needs of users and in some cases certain thoughts can also be captured to operate computer.
- Speech Synthesis - Those users, who are non-verbal, can take advantage of speech synthesis technology either by using computer or through touch screen

- Improvement in employability - Ability to operate simple machinery/security gate etc is can improve the employment potential tremendously for persons with physical limitations. Any such job, which does not entail too many different type of operation can be easily achieved with the help of these technologies, that we have been working with.

| Ability | Appropriate Technology | Cost |
|--|--------------------------|----------------|
| No movement of hand/leg | Brain-computer Interface | Rs 25000-30000 |
| No finger movement but gross hand movement | Hand gesture | Rs 2000-6000 |
| Slight hand/finger movement | Touch Screen based | Rs 3000-20000 |

To summarize, we have now a range of technological options available based on development within country to enable differently abled based on their ability.

THE NEED FOR BUILDING A SECURE SOCIETY

— Guy Standing

Indians emerging from university or college in 2013 onwards will be facing a profoundly different labour market and economic system than were faced by their predecessors. They will enter a world full of uncertainty, with a global class structure in which they will be expected to be more entrepreneurial than at any time in history.

As such, they will need to understand the structural realities and to appreciate the need to avoid smugness and disrespect for principles of social solidarity. You may need help at some time, and you should accept the need for mechanisms for security for everybody around you.

Consider the emerging class structure in our globalising market system, in which India is fast becoming a major component. At the top is a plutocracy, it consists of a few fabulously rich household names, living in an objectionable opulence. They reflect a winner-takes-all market system. Some readers may dream of joining this elite. But there is no economic or moral justification for the degree of their affluence, especially given what is happening to hundreds of millions of people deprived of the very basics of humanity.

In terms of income, way below the plutocracy are industrious businessmen and women and below them a sizeable salariat, those in long-term salaried employment, in the public sector and corporations. Around the world, not just in India, the salariat is not growing, and many in it are finding that the benefits and protection their predecessors had are under strain. Even large firms can be taken over, sold or cut up, while much of the public sector is subject to outsourcing or restructuring. But many will continue to aspire to join its ranks. Beware. That could be a gilded cage, providing labour security but a life of limitations to human development.

Alongside the salariat is a growing group I call proficians. This consists of people with education, with energy and ambition, who are "self-entrepreneurs". They may earn a lot and live in the fast lane. They must beware too. Constant uncertainty goes with feverish intensity of labour. They risk burn out at age 31-and-a-half. A few of the successful may join the plutocracy; more will drift into the salariat. Many will drift downwards.

Before considering where they may drift, recall that the next group down the socio-economic scale is one where graduates are least likely to go. This is the old core, variously called 'the organised' or 'formal' sector, the working-class, the proletariat. Globally, this was long expected to become the majority. It consists of workers in stable full-time manual jobs, working for wages set by collective bargaining, with the prospect of modest pensions. Their numbers are not growing anywhere now, and will never reach 10% of the Indian workforce.

Ironically, the welfare states of the rich countries were built by and for this working class and mode of labour. For decades, Indian social policy planners tried to build a social security system and a set of labour regulations suited to this type of worker. But a contributory social insurance system will never work in India and is dying in every country where it was once a defining feature of society.

It is below the old core where a growing number of relatively educated Indians will find themselves. This is the global precariat. It consists of people faced by many forms of insecurity, with short-term jobs, fluctuating incomes, tenuous benefits and, above all, a sense of having no secure occupational identity or narrative to give their lives. They will be expected to be mobile, flitting between jobs, taking on much work that is not labour, in that they will feel they must do it but without assurance of remuneration.

This emerging class is described elsewhere. For the first time in history, millions of young people, and many not so young, face a life of systemic uncertainty. On leaving university, students will fear joining the precariat. But there is also an upside, since around the world millions are realising they have a detachment from the drudgery of constant labour, and can realise the potential value of other forms of work and leisure that can be creative, productive and fulfilling in ways that could not be said of full-time labour in a job stretching ahead for thirty years or more.

The trouble is that the price is too high at the moment. Insecurity preys on the mind. It wrecks plans to build a family. It induces stress and distress. Too many people are faced by years of uncertainty. Unlike risk, for which one can take out insurance, with uncertainty one cannot work out the probability of an adverse event or work out the likely cost or difficulty of recovering from it. To use a phrase from another context, it is about "unknown unknowns". This will be the reality for a growing number of people, even when they make a choice of occupation. Will it last? Will it change? Will I be able to adapt to the changes that will occur?

This is a moment for honesty, a moment when one should try to envisage the sort of society one would wish to encourage, when one cannot be sure where one will end up. As many readers will know, this is called "the veil of ignorance" principle, asking what you think would be fair if you would not know where you would end up in the distribution of outcomes.

Those who ask themselves that question may conclude that the ideal would be a society in which everybody has basic social and economic security, the assurance of enough income on which to survive in times of uncertainty and insecurity. In a way, that is what the evolving debate about direct cash transfers or benefits is about. For university graduates, that may seem strange. Perhaps they have not even noticed that there is a debate about cash transfers. But if they want basic security for themselves and their friends and relations, think how much more desirable that would be for the hundreds of millions in the slums and villages of this rapidly growing economy.

At the time of writing, a pilot scheme has been operationalized in several parts of the country. In selected villages, thousands of men, women and children have been receiving each month an unconditional basic income cash transfer. It is a modest amount. But it has given discretionary spending power. And the results are inspiring, since even though uneducated and surviving in deprived circumstances, people are rational and spend on food, healthcare, schooling for their children and basic sanitation.

Now the government has been drawn to support cash transfers, and are rolling out experiments. We should encourage the reformers, and hope they will not lose their nerve in the face of opposition. It is not true that cash benefits are a threat to public social services, or will undermine a 'right to food'. The bureaucratic raj, dishing out subsidised items and telling people how to live, is paternalistic, patronising, inefficient and prone to deep corruption. We know that most public money spent on social policy for those deemed to be 'poor' never reaches the intended beneficiaries. Reform is needed.

Most ironically of all, in the future those in the precariat will also need a cushion of basic security. The state should be used to provide that, for secure people are more altruistic, more productive and more socially responsible. They make better citizens, and in society that is what is most important. We all need basic security in which to grow as human beings and as working people.

15,000 Himayat-trained J&K youth to get jobs in 2013 : Jairam

Launched in the face of hostile conditions created by Kashmiri separatists over a year ago at the University of Kashmir campuses in Srinagar, the Union Rural Development Minister Mr. Jairam Ramesh's Himayat initiative will have nearly 15,000 youth trained and placed in different jobs in the public and the private sectors in the current financial year.

Mr. Ramesh promised for capacity building, training and placement of the conflict-riddled State's youth, besides the upliftment of women. In his keynote address in the Jammu University recently he revealed to an enthusiastic gathering that 5,000 youth from J&K had been trained and helped to get jobs under the Himayat scheme since the day it was introduced by him in 2011. As many as 15,000 more were being trained and helped to get jobs, primarily in the country's corporate sector, which had already offered a remarkable placement drive.

For its initial life of five years, Himayat, among others supported by the Jammu and Kashmir Bank Ltd, would benefit 100,000 unemployed youth from J&K, Mr. Ramesh said.

While claiming that 76.42 per cent of the trained youth had proved their mettle and had been retained by the companies, Mr. Ramesh declared the enhancement of the monthly stipend in favour of the youth under training. As against the existing monthly of Rs. 1000 for two months, the Himayat youth will now be paid Rs. 2000 a month for six months.

Mr. Ramesh disclosed that the Government of India, in coordination with the Government of Jammu and Kashmir, was also launching a special scheme for socio-economic welfare and the upliftment of the State's women. It would be part of the Centrally-sponsored Mahila Swayam Sahayata Samooch for which an outlay of Rs. 800 Crore had been earmarked. He expressed satisfaction over the interest more than 30,000 Panchs and Sarpanchs were showing in these developmental initiatives in the State.

The State Chief Minister Mr. Omar Abdullah said that the special capacity building and employment schemes like Himayat, Udaan and the State government's Sher-e-Kashmir Employment and Welfare Scheme for the unemployed youth had gone a long way to train and absorb the youth in different sectors.

Mr. Abdullah said that over four lakh youth were currently unemployed in the State. Of them, 70,000 were being taken into government services this year. He said that the Centre's support would be significant in expanding the job market for over three lakh youth.
