INDIA - CHINA TALKS

- Eight pacts inked in various issues ● Target set to increase trade in 47% in 2 years ● Easier visa regime on anvil Weeks after a military standoff across the Line of Actual Control (LoAC) threatened to derail bilateral ties between India and China, the two Asian giants set a target to increase bilateral trade 47 per cent in two years - from $68 billion in 2012-13 to $100 billion by 2015. The two sides also agreed to work on a new set of measures to settle the border issue and establish a relaxed visa regime to ensure businessmen from both sides could travel to each other's countries without having to go through a long process.

To address the issue of India's widening trade gap with China, it was decided India would be given greater access to the Chinese market. After a second round of talks between Prime Minister Manmohan Singh and Chinese Premier Li Keqiang, both sides took stock of the "lessons learnt" from the recent tension across the border and agreed to explore innovative ways to settle the matter.

Eight Agreements Signed

The two country's governments signed as many as eight agreements. They are :

Indian official pilgrimage

- (i) The Kailash Mansarovar Yatra to be conducted every year from May to September
- (ii) China to make improvement to facilities on the route, maintain smooth

communication, assist in renting wireless sets and local SIM cards

Joint economic group

The three working groups are

- (iii) Services Trade Promotion Working Group
- (iv) Economic and Trade Planning Cooperation
- (v) Trade Statistical Analysis

Efficient irrigation

- (vi) Aims to enhance bilateral cooperation in the field of water efficient technology, with applicability in agriculture and exchange of best practices

Cooperation among cities

- (vii) Both sides agree to identify sister cities & sister states/provinces in India & China
- (viii) Idea is to establish relationships in areas of mutual interest and enhance greater people-to-people contacts

Expanding Trade

The Indian and Chinese governments agreed to scale up two-way trade to $100 billion by 2015 from $67.8 bn in 2012-13. Bilateral trade went from $2.1 bn in 2001-02 to $75.6 bn in 2011-12; it then came down to $67.8 bn during 2012-13. Simultaneously, India's trade deficit increased from $1.1 bn in 2001-02 to $40.8 bn in 2012-13. In 2012-13, China became India's fourth largest trading partner from third largest in 2011-2012. Our exports fell from $18.1 bn in 2011-12 to $13.5 bn in 2012-13.

India and China signed three separate agreements to give access to three of India's exports to address the imbalanced trade between the two countries. The agreements will allow India to export buffalo meat, fisheries and pharmaceuticals and also feed and feed ingredients. The export of buffalo meat is not allowed from India to China and this has been a long pending issue between two countries. With the resumption of trade, India hopes a big merchandise trade that will not only be helpful in reducing trade imbalance of India but also in China's food security by providing quality and hygiene meat products. "The signing of the MoUs between India and China is a good beginning to address the issues India is raising with China from time to time," said Commerce and Industry Minister Anand Sharma after a meeting with his counterpart Gao Hucheng. "All the sectors are of immense trade importance to India and India has clear price and quality competitiveness in these sectors to compete in the world market," Sharma added.

Taking Stock of the new Anti Rape Law

- Madhu Mehra

The Criminal Law (Amendment) Bill, 2013, more popularly called the anti-rape bill, is now law. The outrage following the homicidal gang rape in Delhi unleashed events that lent force to the longstanding demand by the women's movement for comprehensive reform of laws relating to sexual assault. These demands were bolstered by the recommendations of the high level committee, headed by retired Justice Verma, that called for reform of criminal laws, police reforms, prevention and education interventions to effectively tackle impunity for sexual violence. With the new bill passed by the parliament, the law stands substantially changed. This article takes stock of the ways in which the new amendments re-framed sexual offences in the law, their significance and the challenges that remain. While being far from comprehensive, these changes substantially transform the way legal redress for sexual offences have been framed in the law. A few examples below contextualise the significance:

- The definition of rape in the penal code is now expanded beyond penile vaginal penetration, to include all forms of non-consensual penetrative sexual acts by men on women. Moving away from a patriarchal framing of the offence, the offence responds more accurately to how women experience penetrative sexual assault. The law has historically privileged penile penetration of the

This distinction served to protect purity of male lineage, and simultaneously, stigmatise non-penile vaginal intercourse, labeled as 'unnatural' carnal intercourse under section 377 of the Indian Penal Code. This is declared an offence not because of the existence of force, but simply because it was deemed 'against the order of nature', serving to criminalise homosexuality (currently the constitutionality of this provision is under consideration of the Supreme Court of India). The new definition of rape breaks that binary between natural and unnatural penetrative sex as far as men and women are concerned, punishing all forced penetrative sex by men on women. However, since the law specifies that the victims of rape to be women only, it excludes male, transgender and other victims of penetrative sexual violence from the scope of legal redress - thus leaving undisturbed, the stigma attached to homosexuality.

- The new amendment defines 'consent', to mean an unequivocal agreement to engage in a particular sexual act; clarifying further, that the absence of resistance will not imply consent. Non-consent is a key ingredient for commission of the offence of rape. The definition of consent therefore is key to the outcome of a rape trial, and has been interpreted frequently rape judgments conclude that the sex was consensual, based on various factors, including that: the victim was not a virgin, that there were no injuries to show that she put up a stiff resistance, that the victim was 'habitual to sex', that the victim willingly took a ride with or accompanied the accused, that she was acquainted with one of the accused, that she mingled with male friends and so on. Rather than focus on the conduct and actions of the accused, rape trials have historically put the rape survivor under moral scrutiny. An amendment to the Indian Evidence Act in 2003 barred the use of previous sexual history of the victim to discredit the survivor's testimony in rape trials. Despite this change, sexual history, real or perceived, has continued to inform every step of the rape prosecution to the survivor's detriment. Against this backdrop, introduction of a clear definition of consent assumes immense importance. The amendment clearly places upon the accused, an obligation to show that an agreement to the sex act in question was obtained, striking at the hostile focus on the survivor's conduct.

- Another aspect to consent is the age set by the law when it recognises consent to be valid to the making of the unmaking of an offence. The age below which consent is irrelevant is person is deemed to lack legal capacity to consent to the act. This serves to protect children from sexual acts, forced or otherwise, to secure them against abuse and consequences when they lack the capacity to negotiate or understand the nature and consequences of their actions. The cut off age, whatever it be is inevitably arbitrary, so its often recommended that the law nudge this cut off, to recognize consent between young persons of proximate age group, so as to not taint them with criminality for actions that are consensual; not forced, abusive or violent. In the course of debates leading to the amendment, women's groups and indeed, the National Commission for Protection of Child Rights argued for retaining the age of statutory rape at 16 years, as the law did until the recent enactment of the Protection of Children from Sexual Offences Act, in May 2012. The amendment unfortunately retains the age of statutory rape at 18 years, rejecting the proposal to restore it to 16 years that was the law in the past. In doing so, the law collapses all legal minors as children, when the in fact, minors as a category includes infants, children and young persons, thus undermining the 'best interests' of young persons, who need to be protected from sexual harm and parental retribution alike. CAREER IN ENVIRONMENTAL SCIENCE

Damage to the environment has reached alarming levels. It is to such an extent that we hear the terms global warming, climate change, glacier melting, acid rains and pollution at least once, every day! With awareness on environmental issues increasing by the day, 'conserving the planet' has become the common goal and responsibility of every nation, industry, NGO, intellectual and common man. In this scenario, environmental engineering/science is the best career option for those who vouch to be champions of conservation of environment and sustainable development.

Environmental science is the study of environment. It covers different components and aspects of environment including the human-environment interactions and their effects. Professionals in this field endeavour to deal with the challenges threatening the natural environment. They are all environmentalists - whose mission is environmentalism - preserve, restore and improve the natural environment at different levels.

As an academic discipline, Environmental science is an interdisciplinary academic field that integrates physical and biological sciences. It covers Ecology, Physics, Chemistry, Biology, and Geology. Environmental engineering deals with conservation of environment. It is application of science and engineering principles to conserve the environment.

Environmental science/engineering is related to several fields directly and indirectly. Graduates and postgraduates in this stream can find employment across industries such as construction, chemical, manufacturing and energy. Industrial giants across the globe have initiated CSR activities to curb the damage being caused to the environment. Companies that adopt CSR initiatives related to environment protection hire environmental science graduates and engineers. Then, there are not-for-profit organisations actively working in this area.

Coming to opportunities in government organisations, departments that deal with natural resources can provide roles for these professionals. Whether it is for devising a policy to control pollution, saving forests and wildlife, protecting natural resources, or developing alternate sources of energy, their inputs, apparently, cannot be disregarded. Research, consultation and pedagogy are some more avenues. Some typical roles available in this field are:

Environmental scientists: The job is to understand the impact of human activities on the environment and find solutions to deal with challenges that threaten the ecosystem. They do research in areas like technology development and advice on adopting environmentally friendly practices.

Environmental engineers: They deal with engineering aspects like waste management, lean manufacture, recycling, emission control, environmental sustainability and public health issues.

Environmental lobbyists: They advice/persuade government personnel, legislators and related NGOs on environmental issues and policies.

Environmental educators: They are academicians who teach environmental science or allied subjects such as ecology or hydrology.

Some more roles are environmental biologists, environmental modellers, environmental journalists and environment-related technologists.

Remuneration

Based on the job role, candidate with a bachelor's degree can earn salary between Rs.15, 000-30,000. Those with a postgraduate degree are offered anywhere from Rs.35, 000 to Rs. 50,000. Those with a Ph.D, working as scientists or consultants can draw between Rs.50000-75000.

Credentials

Environmental Science is offered at Bachelor's (B.Sc), Master's (M.Sc) and Ph.D levels.

Some M.Sc programmes in the subject include specialisations like Environmental Studies, Disaster Management, Ecology and Environment and Sustainable Development.

Environmental Engineering is offered as BE/B.Tech and ME/M.Tech programmes. Postgraduate courses are offered with specialisations like Environmental Geomatics and Water and Environmental Technology.

Apart from these, graduates from academic backgrounds like Civil Engineering, Mechanical Engineering, Chemical Engineering, Architecture, Geophysics, Oceanography, Botany, Zoology, Wild Life, Atmospheric Sciences and Law can also enter this field. It is open even to graduates of Social Sciences, Humanities, Population Studies and Management.

Skills

To succeed in this field, paying attention to details is essential. Clarity about objective, focus and foresight are necessary for taking the right decisions at the right time. Apart from strong technical skills, good communication and interpersonal skills are necessary to put the point across effectively.

Logical skills and an ability to conceptualise and apply knowledge are essential to devise solutions. Patience and perseverance are needed to keep going despite bottlenecks and failures that are common in this field.

Challenges

As in any other field, environmental professionals too face challenges in the way of delivering their responsibilities. One such challenge is inadequate information and research pertaining to the challenges and their solutions. Moreover, despite the awareness on environmental issues, the responses of the governments, corporations and individuals to tackle them are far behind the desired levels. Persuading them and bringing the change is not a walk in the park! Poor infrastructure and lack of funds are the other important challenges.

Environmental study is an emergent, responsive and dynamic field. To deal with the present day challenges facing the environment, trained professionals with innovative thinking and who are sensitive to environmental issues are required. So for those who are keen on improving the natural environment and thereby the quality of human life, this field is an appropriate career option.

policing of inter-caste and inter-community relationships and marriages is so rampant, even in relation to adult offspring, that the law cannot afford to be blind to its indirect usage as a tool for retribution as it does now.

- A gradation of different kinds of sexual offences have been introduced to plug the legal vacuum that existed - with nothing in-between rape and the trivial offence of 'outraging' the modesty of a woman. New offences such as forced disrobing, stalking, voyeurism and acid attacks have been introduced, each addressing a dangerous trend that is alarmingly, on the rise. Public stripping and parading of women has been a common way of 'punishing' transgressions by women, real or perceived, in rural contexts, now increasingly reported in metros too. Acid attacks likewise are on the rise, with devastating and sometimes fatal consequences. Reportedly perpetrated by jilted lovers, they are also a popular threat used by vigilante groups to enforce dictats against women's dress and mobility. Voyeurism makes punishable the watching, photosistent following or monitoring of women, physically or electronically, to foster personal interaction despite her disinterest is now punishable under stalking. These new offences plug longstanding gaps in legal protection against sexual intimidation and harm to women.

- Marital rape was criminalized in the unamended penal code only when the couple was 'judicially' separated (under a judicial order), not otherwise, for a maximum sentence of 2 years. The law has now expanded criminalization of marital rape to all cases of separation, whether under judicial order or otherwise, so long as the spouses are living separately. The sentence has been increased substantially, with a mandatory minimum of 2 years extendable to 7 years.
- The amendments have strengthened accountability of the police and public servants for acts of omission and commission in respect of sexual offences. Under the amended law, there is a minimum mandatory sentence of 6 months for dereliction of duty by public servants, for neglecting to act as required by the law, or disobeying the law to the detriment of a woman. The amendment also clar-

These changes provide a strong deterrent against police dereliction, providing tools to hold the police accountable for its actions and inaction. However, the amendment falls short of dispelling the requirement of prior sanction for prosecuting members of the security forces for similar crimes committed, although the Verma Committee recommended this.

- Justice for sexual offences under the law has thus far been limited to punitive redress. The amendment transforms this approach, introducing for the first time the beginnings of reparative justice. The amendments stipulate imposition of fine that may go towards the survivor, as well as compensation for injuries to the survivor from the legal aid board. In addition, it mandates all public and private health facilities to provide immediate free treatment to the victims of sexual violence and acid attack, with penalties for refusal to provide such treatment.

The demands by women's group went beyond the present set of gains enacted into law. Likewise, the Verma recommendations were far reaching, requiring institutional and ideological changes that pre-decades of uphill advocacy by women's groups for law reform advocacy by women's groups, was the ownership of the cause by a wide cross section of society. From a concern limited to the women's constituency, the call to end impunity for sexual violence was owned and echoed across progressive groups and constituencies, paving the way for the most consolidated set of reforms witnessed in relation to sexual violence thus far. The Justice Verma Committee recommendations sets out the blue print for other changes that must follow, transforming the agenda from a limited one of law reform to a larger one for prevention and institutional change. Legal transformation is inevitably a slow and contested process, and must plod at its pace. The more challenging aspects for the future relate to implementation, accountability of the law enforcement machinery, and the creation of support services that enable survivors to access and journey through the legal system with dignity and confidence. The gains of this moment are not limited to the its legislative achievements, but lie in the endorsement by the Verma Committee report to women's rights demands in the period that follows.

Dinesh Kumar Savita and Kamal Singh Bhagel have come home to Nakulnar, Dantewada for a short break when we meet them in August, 2012. They have both been working at a solar energy equipment shop in Raipur for 8 months. For the 22 year old Dinesh, this is not his first job. He says he's been working since he was 14 - starting off at a tea shop, then as a newspaper vendor, as a mistri, at a village grocery store, as a lodge manager and finally as a trained solar-plant mechanic in Raipur. Kamal was unable to clear his class 10th examination, and was helping his father on their agricultural fields and doing daily wage work before he enrolled for a vocational course. Both of them completed CREDA's Solar Plant Installation and Repair training at Livelihood College in 2011. As a part of the placement process, they were offered a job with Cosmo Products in Raipur and are currently working there.

The livelihood journeys of Dinesh and Kamal are echoed in the stories of many young boys and girls from Dantewada and its neighbouring districts in South Bastar, Chhattisgarh.

Transitioning into livelihoods is a critical step for young people in India, but is especially difficult for the youth of South Bastar. As young people growing up in a context of long-standing socio-political tensions, disrupted essential services, and increasing (and unaddressed) dilemmas of identity, the needs of the youth in the region are large and varied. Their livelihood opportunities have been impacted by both, issues of availability, including a lack of diversity of options; and access to available opportunities, especially for those who have not been able to complete the formal education cycle.

Mr. O.P. Chaudhary, Collector of Dantewada was conferred the Prime Minister's Award for Excellence in Public Administration for 2011-12 for taking initiatives in opening school, Livelihood College and other outstanding works in the Naxal infested Dantewada district in Chattisgarh.

In an effort to fill these gaps, and enabling young people to access employment opportunities through a variety of training and placement models, the Livelihood College in Dantewada was started. The college was conceived and initiated in early 2011; with the campus construction completed and first batch of training conducted in October, 2011. The District Administration of Dantewada supports these courses through a combination of schemes and funds, including the Integrated Action Plan Scheme, the Backward Regions Grant Fund and NMDC-CSR. More recently, many of the current courses are sanctioned to run through Government of India's Special Projects under SGSY, Ministry of Rural Development.

Courses at Livelihood College

Over twenty types of courses have been conducted under the Livelihood College umbrella since its inception. These include:

22	PG- Diploma Course in Computer Application
23	Diploma Course in Computer Application	National Institute of Electronics and Information Technology (Formerly DOEACC)

Recently, Indian Society for Agribusiness Professionals (ISAP) has also started three-month training courses on Hospitality, Electrical Repair & Maintenance and Automobile Repair. Other agencies like CAP Foundation, Appolo Group, Yuva Foundation, Art of Living, and ESSAR are in talks with the college authorities for taking up training programmes there.

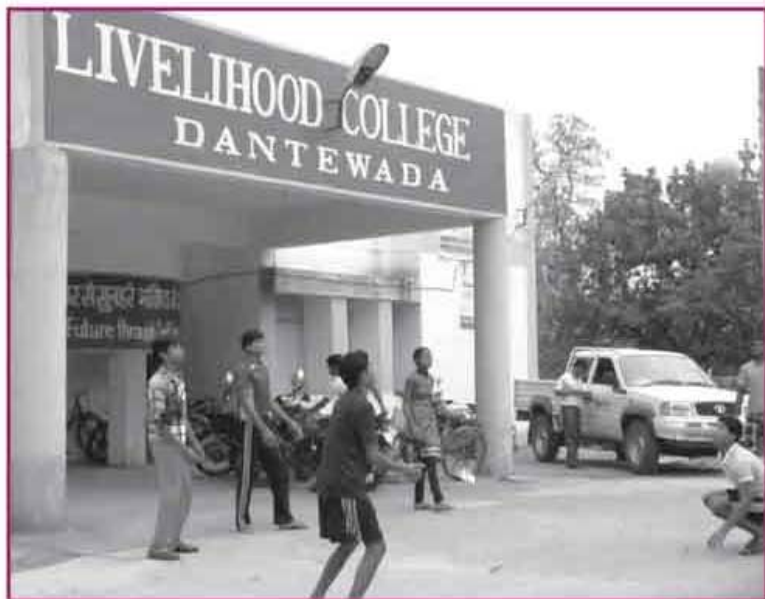

The Training Cycle

The Livelihood College provides various implementing agencies the space and infrastructural facilities (like a fully equipped computer lab) to conduct their training courses at the campus, in addition to complimentary residential facilities to the students. Each agency has its specific courses; yet, follows a similar training cycle including the process of mobilization, admission, training period, placements and follow-up.

Mobilization: In addition to Dantewada, students from Durg, Rajnandgaon, Bilaspur, Sarguja, Narayanpur and the neighbouring districts of Sukma and Bastar also attend the courses at the college. While a mobilization process is carried out, reaching out to distant villages with information about the courses, the students who have already participated in courses are increasingly playing a large role in encouraging their peers to join the college.

Admission: It is ensured that the admission process of the college is flexible so as to include youth regardless of their educational or socio-economic background; and with equal opportunities to girls and boys. Many courses, thus, accommodate students from educational backgrounds ranging from as low as 5th standard to as high as graduation. The exceptions to this rule are the courses conducted through IndiaCan, IL&FS and ISAP for they have nationally uniform selection criteria under the NRLM. For these courses, the candidate must:

- be between 18 and 35 years of age
- have a BPL card
- meet minimum education criteria (Class 5 for IL&FS and ISAP; Class 10 for IndiaCan)

Training Period: The duration of the courses vary between 15 days and 3 months, depending on the nature of the course. For example, the courses conducted through CREDA run for 15 days, covering theory, practical-lessons, and handing over of a toolkit to the trainees. On the other hand, the Retail, Sales, Office Assistant and Accounts on Computers courses by IndiaCan run for 2-months, including additional Personality Development classes and Basic English classes.

Students are provided free-of-cost residential facilities for the duration of their course, with separate hostels for girls and boys. The trainers of most courses also live amongst the students. These trainers are all experienced in their respective fields and undergo a week-long orientation course prior to teaching. The modules are pre-set by the agencies, with contextual inputs from the District Administration. Shared living spaces at the college ensure that a social support network is created for the students; thus further facilitating information exchange for exploring future employment options, supporting skill-transfer and providing motivation in the form of successful role-models to the students.

Placement: Placement of trainees is one of the key aspects of most training courses offered at the college, whereby conscious efforts are taken to ensure placements within the district, in nearby towns and other states. Many trainees also chose to be self-employed or work under informal employment with contractors, government and private bodies and are supported in this process. In the past, trainees have been employed as ground staff with CREDA and PHE, as hospitality staff in hotels in Raipur and Bilaspur such as Hotel GT Star, Hotel Celebrations, Hotel Grand Amba etc., as employees of textile companies in Chennai, and as Sales and Retail employees in showrooms and small-scale companies in Jagdalpur. Subsequently, both informal and formal follow-up is carried out with the placed students.

For many students like Dinesh and Kamal, and especially for girls at the college, the Livelihood College represents their first independent experience outside their homes and communities. By providing a safe space for learning, skill-building, and meeting new like-minded students, the college eases their difficult transition to the world of employment. Thereby, enabling the young people of Bastar to seek opportunities for their development with a renewed sense of hope and self-confidence.
