LEGAL PROVISIONS TO COUNTER FIXING IN SPORTS

- Vidhanshu Kumar

The sixth edition of Indian Premier League (IPL) has been in news more for off field activities than the actual games played within the boundary ropes. The six-week league saw some lusty hitting and lethal bowling spells but when on a lazy May morning news of former India player and currently Rajasthan Royals player S Sreesanth's arrest flashed on TV screens across the globe, it already confirmed what many people believed that games were susceptible to the deep tentacles of spot fixing.

Players or officials of at least two IPL teams were arrested on charges of 'spot fixing' with more arrests likely in the near future. The current scandal has raised the demand for enacting new laws to deal with fixing in sports. Presently Section 420 of the IPC deals with such malpractices but experts believe this section alone has not been enough deterrent.

Feeling the pulse of sport lovers Union Law Ministry acted swiftly and work has started on a new bill that will deal with 'dishonest practices' in sports. The Law Minister has said that the bill will be tabled in the monsoon session of the Parliament and that it will be neither too soft that people can think they can get away nor too hard that interferes with the spirit of the game. While the new law is likely in August, let's look at the legal provisions in various countries to deal with fixing in sports.

The British Experience

After the Hansie Cronje scandal that broke out in the early 2000, perhaps the most daring fixing expose was that of few Pakistani players who were caught in the

Legalise Sports Betting : FICCI

Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry (FICCI) has called for legalising and regulating sports betting in India. In a report submitted to the Union Sports Ministry, it said the ban had failed to work, as a result of which approximately Rs. 300,000 crore in black money was being used for betting in the country every year.

- "Despite several attempts to ban it, betting is continuing although in an underground way and substantial resources have been invested into enforcing such a ban. Thus middle way out is it should be regulated in a way which reduces this to an acceptable level. Hence, the government should think of legalising and regulating betting," the report said. FICCI Sports Committee Chairman Mr. Sanjiv Paul said for quite some time the organization was pushing for legalising betting in a regulated manner. "The current problem being faced is very different from betting. The country is faced with fixing arising [out] of betting. Betting is not desirable just as gambling and smoking is not desirable. But banning it has not paid off and the issue keeps on cropping up time and again for last many almost two decades," he said.
- A study by auditing firm KPMG revealed that betting to the tune of Rs. 300,000 crore takes place annually in India. If this is made legal, then the government would earn a revenue of Rs. 12,000 to 19,000 crore per annum and eliminate the play of black money also.
- The report has been authored by Mr. Carl Rohsler, Partner, Squire Senders, Mr. Rajpal Singh, Head-Sports, FICCI and Mr. V. Singhania, Sports Lawyer.
- The greatest advantage of regulating sports betting, according to the FICCI report, is going to be accountability for large amounts of money transferred through illegal channels and reduction in cases of match-fixing, money laundering and crimes. "If gaming and betting is regulated in India, it will benefit the exchequer and could potentially fund sports development, social protection or welfare schemes and infrastructure development plans," it said.
- FICCI has highlighted how a blanket ban on sports betting is impossible to be sustained without proper regulation. It has also pointed out how different countries had benefited by legalising betting.
- "A system which seeks simply to prohibit rather than control gambling is turning its back on the problem. Ban cannot be implemented but sports betting can be controlled with proper regulation to prevent further deterioration of conduct of sports in country," the report added.
- FICCI said it has realised the negative aspect of sports betting on society. The question now is how to tax the money involved in gambling. We need to devise a system which encourages betting operators to function openly.

act of spot fixing by a sting operation carried by News Of The World. In the Lord's Test played between Pakistan and England in 2010, a bookie Mazhar Majeed was caught on camera accepting bribe and informing undercover reporters that Pakistani pacers Mohd Asif and Mohd Aamer will bowl no balls at specific deliveries. This inside information would have helped betters to make calls on those deliveries and derive undue benefits.

Cricket's ruling body International Cricket Council (ICC) took cognizance and banned three players Mohd. Asif, Mohd. Aamer and skipper Salman Butt. Meanwhile criminal case proceedings were moved against these players at the London Court. The Crown Prosecution Service (CPS) charged the players of conspiracy to obtain and accept corrupt payments. The players were also charged for conspiracy to cheat under the 2005 Gambling act. This case was unique as the 2005 Gambling act was largely untested in courts and hence the outcome could provide a way to deal with corruption in sports. After detailed hearings the Court convicted the three players along with Mazhar Majeed guilty of Conspiracy to cheat and also of accepting corrupt money. Two days later, Butt was given a term of 30 months in jail, one year imprisonment was handed out to Mohd Asif and Mohd Aamer got six months in jail. The book maker was sentenced for two years eight months.

A BILL TO DIVIDE MATRIMONIAL PROPERTY

- Flavia Agnes

Historically, we can discern three important strands in women's campaign for legal rights the world over - the struggle for the right to vote (or, in other words, to political participation), the right to divorce and the right to own property. After a sustained struggle, women in England secured the right to vote in 1928, were awarded a limited right of divorce in 1857, and the legally separated married women were awarded the right to hold separate property in 1872. In comparison, in India, the right to vote and the right to equality were enshrined within the Constitutional scheme in 1950 without much protest. The Hindu woman secured the right to divorce in 1955 after a considerable struggle. The right to property was the most contentious issue during the Hindu Code Bill debate of the fifties. Finally a watered down version was enacted in 1956 which awarded Hindu women a limited right of succession in the father's self acquired property. This was an illusory right as the father was also simultaneously awarded the right to bestow the property upon his sons through a will during his lifetime, and thus subvert the legal provisions of the enactment. The right to ancestral (HUF) property was secured much later, in 2005, after a sustained campaign of 50 more years. Despite the gains secured through leg-such as will, gift, or wilful relinquishment. Most state laws deprive women of the right to succeed to agricultural property. Of the three rights - vote, divorce and property, the right to property appears to be the least accessed by women, not only in India but the world over. In India, a misconception continues to prevail that a woman loses her right to parental and ancestral property at the time of her marriage. Dowry is projected as the Indian custom of awarding property to the daughter at the time of her marriage. Hence it is erroneously presumed that thereafter, she loses her right to claim equal inheritance in her natal home. This misconception drives many married women who are harassed for dowry to suicide as they believe they have no place in their parental home when they are discarded from their husband's home. We need to examine marital violence and dowry murders in the context of denial of property rights in the parental home. When we examine the economic entitlements under the matrimonial statutes, we are confronted with yet another yawning gap. While women from most communities have a right of divorce, they do not have a corresponding right to matrimonial property. Under the legal regime of separation of property of the English common law tradition, the property acquired by the husband is deemed to be rights. While superficially the notion that each person is entitled to one's own property appears to be a just and equitable premise, as we probe deeper into the ascribed gender roles within marriage, it becomes problematic. Our society views men as the primary breadwinner of the family. In order to facilitate this process, a woman is expected to sacrifice her career and dedicate herself totally to the task of caring for him. In this process, she is also expected to take on the task of home making, child bearing, child rearing and caring for the sick. Even if she is required or permitted to work, in most situations, it would only be to augment the family income. Her earnings are treated as supplementary income of the family. The contribution of the home maker spouse has no economic value. In a recent ruling, Arun Kumar Agarwal v National Insurance Company (AIR 2010 SC 3426) the Supreme Court has criticized the 2001 census enumeration which categorised 367 million home makers as 'non workers' along with beggars, prisoners and prostitutes. Though the matrimonial property gets accumulated through the active contribution of the home maker wife, the husband exercises exclusive ownership rights over it. Hence when a marriage breaks down, most women are rendered destitute. A woman's right is confined to Ever wondered why we have such elaborate rituals in marriages? Are you boggled about how the monetary system came into existence? Have you always marvelled why we live the way we do? Yes? Then welcome to the world of Anthropology. This is the world that will satiate your curiosity. Anthropology is the study of human evolution. It is a holistic science that strives to understand human beings and their actions in the biological, social, cultural and economic contexts, across time and space. It finds its application to everything that relates to man - family, society, politics, religion, economics, law, administration, education, technology or medicine. It covers the formation and transformation of all these features of human life. The study and research of Anthropology leads to the solutions to a variety of problems and challenges facing mankind. Anthropology is ever evolving, just like its subject, the human. Traditionally, the study of Anthropology was limited to studying tribes, relics and fossils. However, modern anthropology studies man without the labels of 'primitive' and 'modern'. Today, a whole lot of specialised areas have emerged, namely Archaeological Anthropology, Biological Anthropology, Social Anthropology, Cultural Anthropology, Urban Anthropology, Visual Anthropology, Economic Anthropology, Forensic Anthropology, Organizational Anthropology, Linguistic Anthropology, Medical Anthropology, Media Anthropology, Ecological Anthropology, Digital Anthropology and so on.

As an option for study

Mr. G.V. Suresh, Director - Human Resources, SonicWall Inc. says, "Anthropology is slowly gaining sheen

as a good study option. Till a few years back, lack of exposure to the subject and lack of literature that can be used as study material pushed it to the end of the list. But the recent developments in human history are making people more conscious about the need to study themselves." Mr. Suresh did his post graduation in Anthropology, Public Administration and Business Management. There are several universities across India offering courses in Anthropology. These courses range from Bachelor's degree to Ph.D. At postgraduate level, Anthropology is offered under both Arts and Science groups. The MA degree deals with the humanities aspect of anthropology, concentrating more on culture, society and linguistics. As a science degree, Anthropology is combined with pure science and deals with human evolution. Degrees in Anthropology are open to students from varied academic streams, though preference is given to those from the relevant stream. Some of the specialisations available are Social Anthropology, Physical Anthropology, Pre-historic Archaeology and Applied Anthropology. Prehistoric Archaeology deals with the study of antiquities and relics using geological and paleontological evidences. Physical/Biological Anthropology is about physical or biological aspects of human beings. Socio-Cultural Anthropology studies the socio-cultural dimensions of human living. Applied Anthropology is putting the anthropological data and information to practical use. According to Shriram Venkatraman, post-graduate student at the Department of Anthropology, University of Madras, "The uniqueness of anthropoloogy lies in its scientific approach and methodology involving intensive field work and participant observation." So, apart from learning various topics under the curriculum, applying theories, employing methodologies, formulating and testing hypotheses and developing extensive sets of data through careful observation, interviewing and ethnographic studies, are integral to the study. Many universities provide opportunities to students to work with NGOs among various communities in tribal, rural and urban areas as part of their course curriculum. A postgraduate degree in Anthropology is the eligibility requirement for M.Phil or Ph.D in the subject. With the developments in the field and its extended horizons, research prospects are quite promising for aspirants.

Skills

The most important criterion to get into Anthropology and succeed in it, is an intense curiosity to learn about various aspects of human life. Students should be passionate about the subject. Thirst for knowledge, undying enthusiasm and adventurous spirit are some traits of a good anthropologist. They should be inquisitive, keen observers and champions of humankind. Patience and perseverance are essential for venturing into research. Strong oral and writing skills, decent knowledge of primitive languages and strong knowledge of local language, provide the extra edge for fieldwork. One has to be prepared for physically and mentally exhausting fieldwork while studying ethnic groups, antiquities or excavating for relics. Willingness to stay on the site, whether it is a remote village, desert or even underwater is important to stay afloat in this career.

Job Opportunities

Job opportunities for anthropologists are bright in government, private and international organisations. Anthropological Survey of India provides research opportunities for anthropologists. ASI extends facilities to promising scholars to carry out research activities through its fellowship programme. There are four categories of fellowships, namely Junior Research Fellow, Senior Research Fellow, Post-Doctoral Fellow and Visiting Fellow. All research fellows are encouraged to register themselves for Ph.D. Another good option is taking UPSC examination and getting into civil services. Other government organisations where anthropologists can find opportunities are Planning Commission, Commission for Scheduled Castes, Tribes and Other Backward Classes, Central/State Tribal Research Departments, Census of India, National Institute of Nutrition, National Institute of Rural Development, Centre for Economic and Social Sciences and Pondicherry Institute of Linguistics and Culture and Folklore Research Centre, Chennai. The roles offered include Cultural Resource Manager, Archaeological Technician, Development Specialist, Preservation Planner, Architectural Historian, Public Historian and Historic Structure Review Specialist. International organisations that hire anthropologists are WHO, UNICEF and UNESCO. Educational institutions, social service organisations, museums, publishing houses, crime detection agencies, forensic laboratories and corporate houses also employ anthropologists. A background of Anthropology provides a strong foundation to pursue a career in other fields also. Whether it is journalism, social work, pedagogy, public relations or even human resource development, a degree in Anthropology improves the candidate's chances of getting hired. According to Mr. G.V. Suresh, "Business organisations have realised the value of the contribution of anthropologists and started working with them. In fact, sometimes, candidates with Anthropology background are preferred over MBAs. Recruiters, engagement managers, CSR executives and ethics managers are some roles. Thus, the future for anthropology students is definitely bright." So, what are you waiting for? Enquire whether the university in your area offers a course in Anthropology. Study human evolution and there will be no looking back in your career.

LEGAL PROVISIONS TO...

Australia Leads the way

In Australia a new law was enacted in 2012 that has made match fixing or game tanking a criminal offence with provisions for prison up to 10 years. The Australian government acknowledged that corruption in sports is rising dramatically and steps need to be taken to protect the integrity of sports.

With this in mind the Australian government compiled National Policy on Match Fixing in 2011 to deal with fraudulent practices in sports. The policy has laid out detailed guidelines for government, sport organizations, betting agencies etc. The policy aimed for 'nationally consistent' legislation to deal with match fixing or spot fixing.

According to some media reports in India, the Australian laws and policies would be studied in detail to prepare the new legislation. Various other countries already have legal provisions against fixing in sports. For example countries like France, Germany, Denmark and Sweden political parties and other stake holders to make a comprehensive law. This broad based legislation would cover all sports and would not be focused on cricket alone. "Dishonest practices" will be defined properly so that seemingly innocent gestures like tucking in the towel or a particular celebration doesn't miss the ambit of law.

Need for Exclusive Law

Most of these countries have some provisions specially fitted in to deal with corruption in sport, but according to leading sport organizations they are not enough. In countries like Italy and Brazil, match fixing have been proved in court but largely the punishments have been meted out to the players who have faced bans or jail terms.

Football's ruling body FIFA has consistently maintained that just booking players and giving them harsh punishment is not enough to root out the problem. FIFA argues that those who are luring players, or offering bribes often roam scot free and unless they are brought under control this malaise is not going to die down. It is in this context that the need for exclusive law dealing with match fixing is strongly felt and the world may be curiously look-passionate sport lovers often regard their favorite games like football or cricket as their religion. But with instances of frauds at rise, it is only natural for the paying public to feel cheated. Combined with stakes in sports that is rising considerably, it is only proper that an effective law takes place that may act as deterrent to fixing in sports.

Today India is the second fastest growing economy in the world. The Indian construction industry is an integral part of the economy and a conduit for a substantial part of its development investment. The construction sector is poised for growth on account of industrialization, urbanization, economic development and people's rising expectation for improved quality of living. One of the biggest driver for growth is the aspiration of India's middle class to own homes.

Construction accounts for nearly 65% of total investment in infrastructure in the country. Investment in construction accounts for nearly 11% of India's GDP. The Planning Commission had proposed an investment of around US $500 billion in the Eleventh Five-Year-Plan period (2007-2012). This outlay has been made for infrastructure development projects such as development of bridges, dams, power plants, roads etc. In addition to this outlay, the Indian government has taken a number of initiatives to encourage the construction industry such as easing the FDI norms, doing away with the urban land ceiling act etc.

The construction sector mainly comprises of work related to constructing, demolishing and renovating engineering structures. The industry employs various people from different qualification backgrounds. Any construction project requires both skilled labor as well as qualified professionals working together to complete complex projects. The construction industry has multiple segments. The segments are usually defined by the type of construction. Construction industry segments include Residential, Commercial, Industrial, Infrastructure projects etc.

Employment Scenario

The construction industry is the second largest employer in India. The construction industry includes allied industries such as steel, brick manufacturing, cement manufacturing etc. Any large scale infrastructure investment such as the one by the Indian government triggers a boom in employment not just in the core construction industry but also in allied industries. This boom is resulting in multi-fold employment opportunities arising in both Indian and Global organizations. Global majors such as JLL, Demag Properties, UAE Rackeen amongst others have made significant investments in India and are looking to hire talent. Indian construction majors like Gammon, DLF, Hiranandani etc. are not far behind in their need for skilled manpower.

Taking a cue from the governments ambitious projects lined up during the 11th plan period the demand for construction is expected to grow by at least 8-9% with more 2.5 million employment opportunities per annum are expected to be generated. The industry has a need for the full spectrum of employees from directly linked professionals like civil, mechanical engineers and architects to per day wage construction workers.

The construction industry is continually looking for skilled resources. Construction industry is looking for skilled talent across all levels starting from masons, plumbers, electricians etc. to architects, site managers, etc.

Challenges with Talent Availability for Construction Industry

Shortage of skilled workers hinders the progress of work there by delay in meeting deadlines i.e. timely output. There is a vast difference between the business need and the skill set possessed by the workers in the industry today. Most of the gaps in the skill sets are in areas of core knowledge and skill required to undertake relevant job role as part of a construction project. The biggest challenge faced by industry today is that most talent available for key construction activities like masonry, carpentry, brick work etc. is unskilled or has crude skills with limited job relevant knowledge.

The problems get compounded at the supervisor levels. Most organizations hire supervisors with diploma in civil engineering or a degree in civil engineering. These graduates are hired from the various poly-techniques. While these students have a very high level of theoretical knowledge, they have limited practical knowledge and tend to struggle on site. In addition to the challenge of employability of graduates there is also a significant demand and supply gap for talent at supervisor level and above.

The lack of basic skills can result in a number of large scale problems. In proper analysis of work, poor communication etc. can result in poor quality of work output. In the construction sector poor quality invariably can lead to fatality.

Addressing the Skill Gap Challenges in the Construction Industry

The crisis of poor skilled output can only be uprooted when the skill set is intelligently and efficiently improved from grass root levels. The one who is involved in construction i.e. civil engineer, carpenter, draughtsman or labor, has shortage of skill set due to poor training and an education system that struggles to create job ready talent.

In order to achieve good standards in construction sector the Indian government along with the Construction industry has set up Construction Industry Development Council (CIDC). According to CIDC figures there is approximately a shortage of 33% in specialized workforce in construction sector.

For the development of the industry the council has taken up initiatives, to name a few:

- Advise the government on policy formulation
- Training manpower in order to produce skilled workers at various levels in the industry.
- Workers welfare
- Promote new technologies by interacting with international organizations.

The main aim is to promote awareness among the manpower to improve their efficiency by understanding the need. In addition to this a number of industry leading organizations are investing heavily into skill development of their workforce. They are setting up training institutions and working with number of skill development agencies to train their workforce on the ground. The growth rate can be ascending only when enthusiastic and efficient workers maintain the sector.

Building a Career in the Construction Industry

The lower rung jobs in the construction sector are mostly temporary for the labor. If a major project work is taken up by the contractors in different cities, they tend to opt for labor in the local regions leaving behind the experienced workers related to previous project. Low rung jobs require semi-skilled and skilled labor across key trades such as carpentry, masonry, plumbing, painting etc. These trades form critical steps in any construction process. Most low rung jobs are procured through contractors who act as staffing agents for large construction firms. Though low run jobs are extremely critical, most of the people that take up these roles are provided with very limited job security. It is common for most workers not to even have accident insurance. This is slowly changing with firms focusing more on safety and welfare of workers and taking a number of positive steps in this direction. Most construction site today emphasis on PPE (Personal Protective Equipment's) and also has health officers who regular visit their sites. Skilled resources eventually become supervisors. Most diploma graduates from civil engineering also join straight as supervisors. A supervisor's role requires a great level of people management skills. Most construction sites have workers from diverse backgrounds. Workers come from different parts of the country and hence speak different languages and have different cultural attributes. Supervisors are expected to effectively manage these differences and deliver against project deadlines.

Slightly senior roles in the construction industry include those of site managers, safety engineers, site engineers, project managers etc. Though these are management function, unlike other industries, stakeholders in these roles are expected to be a lot more hands on and directly engaged in activities. These roles are extremely challenging as most construction projects are complex and are of very high value.

As far as fresh graduates are concerned the construction industry presents a unique opportunity to grow rapidly while impacting the development of the nation. It would be ideal and wise to join a leading Indian company or an MNC with a local presence even at a starting level as there is significant scope for training and rapid upward movement through ranks for talented individuals. The largest players in the construction industry are DLF, Godrej, L&T, Unitech, GMR, etc.

The construction industry also has multiple role that require human resources to build deep expertise and procure globally accepted certifications. Such roles include those of Safety Engineers, Building Automation Design Engineers etc. In addition to specialized roles, that advent of information technology has opened up multiple avenues for individuals seeking to make a career in this vertical.

The advent of multinationals and the growth of the infrastructure in country are resulting in India becoming a hub for some really large scale global projects. Those who leverage the opportunity to work on such projects of a global scale can aspire to work on multiple global projects across the globe. India is trying to achieve global benchmarks in the construction industry this will only open up more global avenues for the Indian workforce in the construction industry.

For those looking to make their careers in construction, there is a unique opportunity to ride a wave of industry growth to achieve career aspirations. The opportunities in construction industry lie across various skill sets and various levels. The critical success factor for anyone looking to make a career in this industry is the same as that with any other industry- Passion & Perseverance. Those with a passion for construction and the perseverance to strive hard are bound to see success in this industry.

A BILL TO...

woman has an independent source of income, she is denied even this meagre amount. During divorce proceedings, substantial sums can be secured to the wife only through negotiations during court proceedings in the event that husband is desirous of a hasty divorce.

Though the recently enacted Domestic Violence Act has protected the right of residence in the husband's home, for women who would rather be free of an oppressive marital yoke, this is of little solace. To make matters worse, in 2010, the government proposed introduction of, irretrievable breakdown of marriage (or no fault divorce), which could make way for hasty divorces as the parties do not have to prove a matrimonial fault against the other. The reasoning is that several Western countries have incorporated this ground into their matrimonial statutes. But the government overlooked the fact that these countries have also simultaneously introduced the notion of division of matrimonial property.

When the Bill was sent to the select committee several women's groups appeared before the committee and pleaded that introduction of this ground will take away the bargaining power that women have during divorce proceedings filed by their husbands and will render their situation even worse as it will drive them further into destitution. The Joint Select Committee of the Parliament, in its 45th Report submitted to the Rajya Sabha in March, 2011, urged the Government to consider introduction of the principle of 'division of matrimonial property' into our matrimonial statutes. This was sort of victory to women's organisations who have been campaigning for this right for a long time.

It is ironic that at one level, women are denied the right of inheritance in their parental home due to cultural constraints despite statutory rights, at another, they are denied the right to matrimonial property due to lack of statutory protection. Caught in this double blind, women become extremely vulnerable and susceptible to domestic violence. So it is a welcome move by the government to act on the recommendations of the select committee and draft a law which will ensure property division at the time of divorce.

Defining 'matrimonial residence' and 'matrimonial property' will not be an easy task as the law has not dealt with these concerns earlier. Principles evolved in Western countries may not apply to conditions prevalent in India, for various cultural factors. Many times, the matrimonial home is not a nuclear household, it may be a family home owned by parents-in-law. Secondly, the prevalence of a large amount of unaccounted money in our economy makes determination of personal wealth of the husband a difficult task at the time of divorce. The will she be eligible to the husband's property. Rather than acting on impulse and opposing the Bill there is a need to give a careful consideration to these tricky questions so that the legislation will serve to protect women's rights and at the same it will be just and equitable.
