

LEFT WING EXTREMISM - LEARNING LESSONS from SUCCESS STORIES

- Hormis Tharakan

I was taking a morning walk in the gardens of the Indian Social Institute in Bangalore, when I noticed a vaguely familiar lady walking ahead of me. A priest introduced her as Ajitha, the once-famed Naxalite leader of Kerala. She was in Bangalore to attend a conference on Women's Empowerment. The chance meeting set me thinking. When I reached Kerala at the beginning of the Seventies to start my career as a young Assistant Superintendent of Police, Ajitha was an adversary, someone we in the Police considered an enemy of the State. Today, while continuing to champion the cause of the underprivileged, she has repositioned herself as someone who helps society through legitimate means. In fact the reason why she looked familiar was that she had met me, when I was Chief of Police in Kerala, for help in rehabilitating a young woman abandoned by her family. In some ways, Ajitha represents the success of the Kerala model of tackling Left Wing Extremism. Not many remember now that Kerala faced a serious Naxalite problem in the Sixties and Seventies. It was tackled not merely by resolute police action, but also by parallel developmental activity, centre around the historic land reforms introduced by the Achuta Menon-led ministry and schemes to promote education and rural health. There is no denying the fact that the opening up of the Gulf helped too, by weaning away thousands of potential revolutionaries who found sustenance on alien shores.

A Brief History
It was towards the end of the decade of the Seventies that Left Wing Extremism took deep roots in India. As is well known, an agrarian revolution erupted in Naxalbari in West Bengal, close to the Nepal border, in 1967. The uprising, as such was quickly put down. However, the ideology which drove that uprising influenced a generation of university students and young intellectuals in various parts of India. Two significant developments took place as a fall-out of the Naxalbari uprising. One was that, disenchanted elements from the Communist Party of India (Marxist) from various States came together to form the All India Co-ordination Committee of Communist Revolutionaries. Two years later, in 1969, this faction broke away from the CPI(M) to form a new party called Communist Party of India (Marxist-Leninist), headed by Charu Majumdar, with the declared objective of "annihilation of class enemies" as the way to achieving revolutionary success. The second development was the spread of the new ideology to other parts of India, notably Srikakulam in Andhra Pradesh, where, in 1968, Nagabhushan Patnaik, Tarimala Nagi

Reddy and Pulla Chandra Reddy launched their own version of the Naxalite Revolution, and Kerala.

By 1972, however, concerted and determined action by the central and state governments put an end to what can be described as the first phase of Naxalite violence. The left extremist movement remained subdued until 1991. This phase was marked by ideological and personality clashes amongst factions and leaders, resulting in repeated fragmentation. There was also a rethinking during this period on the policy of annihilation of the enemy.

The second phase of Naxalite (or Maoist) violence, starting from 1991 was triggered by the People's War Group (PWG) of Andhra Pradesh and Maoist Communist Centre (MCC) of Bihar. Kondapalli Seetharamaiah who formed the Peoples' War Group in 1980 was expelled from the party in 1991 due to ideological differences and Muppala Laxman Rao, also known as Ganapathi, emerged as PWG's leader. Guerilla Zones were formed in North Telangana and Dandakaranya. From 1998 onwards, a series of mergers of various left extremist factions took place culminating, on September 21, 2004 in the PWG and MCC burying their differences to form Communist Party of India (Maoist) (CPI-Maoist), with Muppala Laxman Rao as its General Secretary. The new united party announced its formation with spectacular attacks on the District headquarters and armoury in Koraput, Orissa in 2004, storming of the prison and freeing of prisoners from the Jehanabad Jail in Bihar in 2005 and the raid on the office of the National Mineral Development Corporation at Herauli in Chhatisgarh in 2006. There has been a series of such attacks, with the most recent ones being the Tadmella attack in 2011 which killed 76 CRPF Jawans and the murderous attack last month on the Congress leaders of Chhatisgarh at Darbha. To top it all, there was the attack on an express passenger train earlier this month in Bihar.

Challenges and Responses
As the demand for a reappraisal of the anti-Maoist insurgency strategy grows in the wake of the recent attacks, it would worthwhile learning from the experience of the few States which have had a degree of success in containing the menace. Tripura (where the threat was not primarily from Left Wing Extremists) and Andhra Pradesh are two other States which have dealt competently with insurgencies in recent times. The then Governor of Tripura, former IPS officer D.N. Sahaya wrote (The Hindu, Sept. 19,

Sustainable Farm Income Through Ber Based Integrated Farming System in Arid Regions

- Dr. Shalander Kumar and Dr. M. M. Roy

Agriculture and livestock production in arid Rajasthan (annual rainfall 100-450 mm) remain severely affected by frequent droughts. Inadequate rainfall, extreme temperature, poor quality of land and ground water further restrict the crop and livestock choice of farmers in the region. High population growth and poor infrastructure oscillate the problems of resource poor rural people. Under such conditions planning is crucial in generating continuous income from farming; selection of appropriate crops, rainwater harvesting and using it efficiently for irrigation together with optimal diversification.

With the objective to demonstrate a model for sustainable farm income through Ber (Zizyphus moritiana) based farming system under arid region, Central Arid Zone Research Institute (CAZRI) provided technical backstopping to a farmer Shri Baboo Khan in its adopted village Dantiwada in Jodhpur district during 2006-11. He is retired army personnel and has 5 ha land mostly rainfed and partly irrigated under arid conditions. The available ground water was salty having pH of 8.0 and EC 5.8 and the soil pH 8.4. Farmer took keen interest in adopting the improved technologies. With CAZRI's guidance and support from NHM he developed a horticultural orchard in one ha area and planted 278 plant of improved varieties of ber (Gola, Sev and Tikri). In addition, he also planted 150 plant of kummat (acacia Senegal) and aonla-6 in between, thus developed a sustainable integrated farming system. Besides fruits, the leaves of Ber were used for fodder purpose which helped him to sustain his livestock even during drought condition. Three varieties of ber were planted so as to get fruits regularly from December to March; Harvesting of Gola takes place during mid December to 15th February, Sev during 3rd week of January to February last and Tikri from mid February to March. He sells ber fruits directly to consumers at his farm or at nearby Highway. He has also maintained 10 goats and prepares compost using goats' droppings and leftover crop residues. To provide protection from the unwanted animals fencing of the whole was done with iron net. Gypsum is used to manage the salt problem.

In rest of the land Sh. Baboo Khan started seed production of HYV of cluster bean, moong and moth bean and sesame. The seed was sold to the non-adopted farmers of the village. Besides enhancing his own income he made valuable contribution in the popularization of improved technologies. He has a 50,000 liter underground tank for rainwater harvesting constructed with partial support from NHM and also a drip system. In the first year the saplings were established with rainwater and from second year the bore-well's salty water and harvested rainwater are used to irrigate the plants. Now 2-3 irrigations are required in during fruiting stage of ber.

Now he is able to earn good income even during the drought year. Now (even in the year 2011-12 of deficit rainfall) he earned a net income of Rs. 50, 000 from one ha of orchard besides other fruits like pomegranate, gunda (lasora), aonla for family consumption. He earns about 20 to 25 thousand per ha from his other 4 ha land cultivating arable crops. Many farmers of the area visit his farm to learn about sustainable agri-horti-system.

Another farmer Shri Nand Kishore Jaisalmeria in Manakla village of Jodhpur (25 km north) who owns 3.1 ha agricultural land under rainfed conditions (average rainfall 365 mm) has also developed a sustainable integrated farming system. Initially his income from crops was very low with zero or negative income in the years of drought. In the early 1980s, he came in contact of CAZRI scientists and planted 750 plants of improved varieties of ber (Gola, Seb, Umran) provided by CAZRI, along with recommended package of practices. The piece of land was developed as an integrated farming system. Along with Ber orchard, annual crops as intercropping, honey bee keeping and a 10+1 goat unit was also maintained by him. Fencing of the farm was created by developing shelterbelts of multipurpose tree species like Accacia tortillis, Prosopis juliflora, Neem and other drought hardy tree species of economic value. The shelterbelt developed as fencing of the farm not only provided sustainable output in terms of fuel India is a trillion dollar economy despite its high rates of illiteracy. We will add about a million jobs this year with GDP growth at 8.2%. With the world economy showing signs of improvement, the Indian economy also showed positive signs of recovery and growth. A majority of new hires into organizations are at an experience level of 1-4 years with candidates less than one year composing about 30% of all new hires.

In 2011, Health Care, Hospitality, Information Technology and Non-machinery manufacturing were the industries that added the maximum number of new jobs. In 2012, companies in the Pharma, IT/ITES, Media & Entertainment, and Real Estate & Construction sectors are most optimistic about new hiring. India's unemployment rate is at about 9.4%. However, our unemployment rates far exceed our unemployment rates.

Corporate's biggest challenge today is to plough through the clutter of resumes and come up with a group of candidates with whom they can work with. A report says that only 14% of all college graduates are recruitable. With many colleges dropping their eligibility requirements for admission in order to fill seats, the quality of college graduates has become diluted. Many of them do not possess fundamental skills like writing a good resume. Many college graduates train vigorously to pass the entrance exam that is administered by the companies. There are coaching academies available today to help candidates clear those entrance exams. This results in hiring candidates who are completely unsuitable for the organization and the reliability and validity of these tests for workforce productivity is questionable.

For a student to transform into a successful employee, he should possess many attributes each of which are unique to the role and the organization and will determine how long he can survive in the system or perform on the job. The organizations that hire in large numbers also have high employee turnover. These include employees who leave because of job dissatisfaction and employees who are let go due to non-performance. The costs of attrition are high. Companies invest on an average about 16 weeks in training every employee on multiple facets and to lose an employee for any reason increases costs. Therefore recruiting a trainable group of employees is the first step towards building a strong workforce.

A survey of college graduates revealed that skills that were found lacking in candidates included reliability, integrity, and teamwork, critical thinking, English communication and entrepreneurship. While long term, educational institutions need to rethink their fundamental pedagogy and make it more application oriented and student centric, they could also seek help from talent sourcing & training organizations that can help in training their students to become more employable. These organizations offer services such as Psychometric assessments to determine aptitude, behavioural traits and communication abilities of students, provide counselling on job prospects, coach in resume writing and provide training programs for the gaps that are discovered in the assessments. They also conduct workshops for providing the skills that employers are looking for but colleges are unable to currently provide. Besides these, the talent sourcing organization, based on the assessment and counselling of students, has the ability to suggest the best-fit profile of an organization for the student's aptitude and attitude.

Students today have a lot of questions about whether their exam scores matter in being hired into an organization. While good scores might be an indication of how hard a person has worked in the past, employers are also aware that exam scores do not give any indication on how well the candidate can contribute to the organization. As a fresh college graduate, it is important for the candidate to do his homework about the organization he is applying to. Find out details about the particular role he is being interviewed for and present himself as the ideal candidate for the job. Employers are looking for sincerity, integrity, ability and an enthusiasm for the job even more than scores of exams past.

Today, students are faced with a lot more opportunities than ever before. Unlike a few decades earlier when employment opportunities were restricted to a few areas, today the arena is bustling with growth avenues in Health care, Hospitality, real estate, architecture, interior design etc. New trends in recruitment procedures include Contract Hiring where employers hire on a project basis, Just-in-time Hiring and Freelance hiring. These new methods can work well for both parties. For the employer, it relieves them from being tied to an employee and for the employee it gives him the flexibility to try on different hats before figuring out what works best for him. Other hot trends include online recruitment, corporate career sites, referrals and networking. Candidates need to update themselves on how they can seek jobs through as many of these avenues as possible.

Social networking websites like Facebook and LinkedIn are also playing increasingly important roles in recruitment and candidates have to be conscious of the image that they portray on the internet as this could impact their career opportunities. As candidates seek to distinguish themselves from the masses that apply for any given position, activities like volunteering for social projects and community service gain increasing relevance. Managers are looking for well-rounded candidates with good communication skills, initiative, ability and drive. With new areas of business and commerce springing up everyday, the fleet footed, updated and professional candidate will always be snapped up by any organization.

protection and conserved the soil and improved its fertility levels. The shelterbelt of multiple species protects the orchard and crops from the hot winds during summers. That not only reduced the evapo-transpiration losses but also provided soothing effect and enhanced the survivability of plants and systems' yield. The continuous trench alongside the fencing (shelterbelt) was helpful to stop the unwanted animals entering the farm. In-situ moisture conservation through trench was sufficient for the growth of perennial plants on the boundary. Soil and moisture conservation was done through compartmental bunding and mulching by partly using the leaf litter. For the first 20 years the farm was totally rainfed. In the first year in establishment stage, as and when required the plants were irrigated by water transported through tanker from far away source. From the second year the orchard was able to survive and produce under rainfed conditions. After 20 years a bore-well was established whose water was saline. Ber is tolerant to saline water irrigation to some extent. The supplemental irrigation during the fruit setting stage even with saline water helped produce good yield. Even after 35 years, at present the farm and the orchard are well maintained and is a source of sustainable income.

Mr. Jaisalmeria and few rural youths (hired by him) were also given training on

'Ber budding'. He then started a nursery of budded ber and worked day and night to prepare budded ber plants. In the initial 15 years he was able to sale lakhs of plants every year to the farmers, NGOs, Government departments from different states and contributed in spread of improved germplasm and package of practices of Ber cultivation.

The major revenue for the farm comes from sale of Ber fruit, rental charges for keeping Honey bee Boxes, leaves of Ber and other trees, fuel wood from pruning and goats. Each plant of Ber produces about 30-40 kg fruits per annum. The farmer earns a total annual net income of about Rs 1,25,000 from 3 ha arid land giving a net income of about Rs.41,000/ha per annum, which is much higher as compared to traditional annual crops in the region.

The perennials (arid horticulture) based farming system not only gave higher income but provided stability of production and income in the arid region.

tem's yield and income by optimally harvesting and using rainwater. The above on-farm experiences amply prove that the farm income could be sustainably increased even under arid regions by suitably integrating appropriate crops, horti & forestry species in the farming system together with rainwater harvesting and its efficient utilization. However there is need to ensure that farmers get timely access to technology and critical inputs through effective extension system. Handholding support at the field level in the initial stage is crucial.

As per the procedure for recruitment, individuals who aspire to join any of the above Regional Rural Banks either as an Officer (Scale-I, II & III) or as an Office Assistant (Multipurpose) will necessarily be required to qualify through the CWE. Prospective candidates who wish to appear for the CWE will have to apply to IBPS after carefully reading the advertisement as regards eligibility criteria, online registration process, payment of prescribed application fee/Intimation charges, pattern of examination, issuance of call letters and CWE scores. Scores of RRBs-CWE-II may also be used by co-op banks and other organizations for their recruitment.

Candidates who had appeared for the CWE will be able to check their status on IBPS website www.ibps.in after the examination. Scores of candidates who secure minimum qualifying marks and above in each test and on total weighted standard scores, if any, will be displayed on IBPS website.

Successful candidates in the CWE who meet with the stipulated eligibility criteria will then be required to apply to any RRB as and when that individual RRB issues advertisement for interviews.

It should be noted that IBPS is a test conducting agency. The ultimate recruitment will be done by each participating who will independently issue a separate recruitment notification, specifying vacancies

Candidates can register quoting their registration no., roll no., password etc. Each Regional Rural Bank will then individually shortlist candidates and carry out their own selection processes i.e. Interviews etc. for final selection.

INDIA FAST IMPROVING ITS POOR TRACK RECORD

Now less than 25% Indians poor, 260 million poor in India in 2011-12 as compared to 290 million in 2009-10: NSSO. Rise in rural income sees sharper fall in poverty level between 2009-10 and 2011-12

Poverty level in the country may have declined significantly between 2009-10 and 2011-12. This is indicated in the latest government survey on house hold expenditure. Poverty levels have fallen to less than 25% of population because of a sharp rise in rural incomes and decent performance by the agricultural sector. Adjusted for price rise, the poverty line for 2011-12, based on the Tendulkar Committee calculations for 2009-10, comes to Rs. 803 per capita per month for rural areas and Rs. 1038.6 for urban areas.

Applying these cut offs to the expenditure estimates released by the National Sample Survey Organization shows percentage of rural poor is likely to have fallen to 24.5% in 2011-12 from 29% estimated for 2009-10. The fall in the urban areas was flatter, from 16% in 2009-10 to 15.5% in 2011-12.

The decline is largely because agriculture sector performed well during fiscal year 2011 and 2012 against a drought situation in 2009. Agriculture sector expanded by 7.9% in 2010-11 and 3.6% in 2011-12.

"During 2009-10, agriculture performed poorly as it was a drought year. Poverty in rural areas is closely linked to agriculture. Whereas 2011 was a normal year, we experienced high food inflation, which explains high purchasing power with the rural population and hence increase in consumption expenditure," said Mr. Pronab Sen, Chairman, National Statistical Commission. Agriculture sector expanded only by 0.8% in 2009-10. Also, rural wages have risen faster than urban wages, due to NREGA, Sen added. More people moving out of agriculture may also be a factor in the depleting poverty in rural areas. Prof. Amitabh Kundu, of JNU suggested. Share of population engaged in agriculture came down to 49% in 2011-12. In rural areas, 59% of the men were engaged in agriculture as against 63% in 2009-10. The share in secondary activities like manufacturing went up to 22% instead of 19% among rural men. Similar was the case with rural women. The cumulative effect was that overall wages rose by 29% in rural areas between 2009-10 and 2011-12 against 23% in urban areas. The reduction in poverty also explains the reduction in share of expenditure on food and a similar rise in non-food expenditure. The share of expenditure on food declined substantially from 53.6% to 48.6% in rural areas and from 40.7% to 38.5% in the urban areas.

Despite the drastic fall in poverty in rural areas, still the average urban monthly per capita expenditure was 84% higher than average rural MPCE for 2011-12. And income disparities in rural areas have risen. The expenditure of the top 10% in rural areas was 6 times that of the bottom 10%, higher than 2009-10, when the expenditure of the top-most decile was only 5.5 times that of the bottom-most decile.

In absolute numbers, according to the latest estimates, there were about 260 million poor in India in 2011-12, down from about 290 million in 2009-10. But the number of poor could rise as the Tendulkar Committee poverty line has come under criticism for being too low at 28 a day for urban areas and 22 a day for rural areas.

2011) on "How Tripura overcame insurgency". He recounts how under the leadership of Chief Minister Manik Sarkar, the State took on the problem of insurgency in a strategic and resolute manner. He goes on to say, "It (the State) formulated a multi-dimensional and fine-tuned construct to respond creatively to the situation. The control mechanism was subsumed in counter-insurgency operations intent on swift area domination and ascendancy, as well as psychological operations and confidence-building measures. An accelerated development thrust, management of the media, civic action programmes of the security forces and the political process were additional factors." The then Director-General of Tripura Police, B.L. Vohra has also chronicled the remarkable turn-around in Tripura in his book, "Tripura's Bravehearts".

The following have often been listed as the reasons for the success of the Police operations against Naxalites in Andhra Pradesh:

- A large number of additional posts were created in the Police.
- Training facilities were upgraded substantially.
- A dense network of roads, police stations, schools and sundry government offices were created, services were provided efficiently, jobs were created through public works and cheap rice provided through ration shops. The State recaptured the areas vacated by the Maoists.

The role that the Greyhounds of AP played in bringing the Naxalite menace under control is well documented. It is no coincidence that the training Guru of the Greyhounds is a veteran of the Special Services Bureau, an outfit set up after 1962 to mobilize the civilian population as an auxiliary fighting force in case of enemy action, as well as a developmental agency in times of peace. It needs to be examined whether such an agency could be created in the fringe areas around territories controlled by Left Wing Extremists.

Gulshan Bamra, who as Collector of Balaghat in Madhya Pradesh, along with Superintendents of Police Harinarayan Sharma and Santosh Singh as well as officers from the Forest and Public Works Departments played a major role in checking the Maoist advance into that district (21 attacks in 2005, none in 2009) says that the National Rural Employment Guarantee Scheme (NREGS) helped him a great deal in creating local employment and thus ensuring that jobless youngsters did not get recruited by the Maoists. In fact, there is no adequate acknowledgement of the fact that some of the most potent anti-extremist weapons available to the Government are schemes like NREGS, National Rural Health Mission and Sarva Siksha Abhyas, if properly implemented. We must also take note of the fact that several States in which there was a growth rate of over 7% over the last few years were Maoist-affected, like Bihar, Odisha, Chhattisgarh and Jharkhand. This means that the development strategy is not failing but is beginning to work, though there is still a long way to go.

Perhaps, the fact that District Collectors, who along with Superintendents of Police and District Forest Officers have been tasked to lead the Government's development initiative, are increasingly being targeted for kidnapping would also seem to indicate that the official outreach is a cause for concern for the Maoists.

Results of surveys conducted by economist Jean Dreze in Chhattisgarh some time back showed that while MNREGS did not gain much headway in the areas under Maoist control, it worked extremely well in remaining districts of the State. The then DGP of Chhattisgarh was on record as having assessed that the best strategy would be to concentrate on the development of districts like Kanker and Rajnandgaon bordering Dantewada, rather than try to carry the development offensive to the Maoist heartland. It would be useful to assess how well this strategy has worked. The abduction of the District Collector of Sukma need not be the only criterion by which the success of the development offensive is assessed.

There are police officers who argue that top priority should be assigned to the task of driving Maoists out of the areas that they control, because they would not permit development activity in such areas. However, as Pupal Datta Prasad, a Senior Superintendent of Police who works with the National Human Rights Commission says, "Even if moral, legal and ethical considerations were to be brushed aside as irrelevant where innocent lives are being lost, there are compelling pragmatic and strategic reasons for the state not to convert the confrontation into a full-scale war. The remedy after all should not be worse than the disease." With laws that mandate the Police to use minimum force, a decisive armed battle against the Left Wing Extremists is not an option that is available. Some officers are even of the view that the tactics of the Greyhounds in Andhra Pradesh (search and destroy, ambush, jungle-combing, shoot down people seen with arms in the jungle, fire first etc) are not sanctioned under India's criminal justice system.

There are, however, many practical problems in successfully investigating crimes perpetrated by Maoists in remote locales. Villagers are reluctant to depose fearing for their own lives. (Almost all the witnesses turned hostile in the Tadmella massacre case, in which 76 CRPF Jawans had been killed, and all the accused were acquitted). A young officer, therefore, recently argued that there should be a change in the laws and the rules of engagement. He says, "Devising a different set of rules of engagement with Naxalites is a necessity to protect our men at the frontlines. The concept of human rights must be inclusive and strike a dynamic balance between the needs of society to progress and individual freedom." On the contrary, there are experienced Police Officers who argue that it is still possible to do a great deal under the existing laws.

In fact the unsung heroes of the war against Naxalites are often the investigating officers who have to put together evidence against great odds to secure convictions. Veteran officers from Andhra Pradesh have shared the names of some of these stalwart investigators who probably contributed more to the defeat of the Naxalites than the Greyhounds did. I do not mention their names since they may continue to face a security threat.

The same is true of Kerala. I mentioned the case of Ajitha, who after going through the legal process for taking part in attacks on two Police Stations is now a respected activist. Another prominent Naxalite leader of those times, I am told, has taken to religious life on coming out of jail. Mundur Ravunny, who was the first accused in the Kongad murder of 1970, a heinous beheading of a landlord and was brought to justice through rigorous investigation led by my first boss, late Balagangadhara Menon, is still prominent in India's LWI firmament, but has not been able to regenerate the reverberations of the spring thunder of the late sixties. Treating Left Wing Extremism (or more precisely, the violence perpetrated by its votaries) as a crime to be tackled through systematic and painstaking investigation rather than combatting it merely through military means may pay greater dividends in the campaign to reestablish the rule of law in the regions affected by the malaise.

Such a strategy may mean that the campaign would be long and gradual. General Secretary Muppala Laxman Rao had told Swedish scholar-journalist Jan Myrdal in February 2010 that the Maoist strategy was to make the war as lengthy as possible. "But we are confident that there is a long-run advantage that cannot be achieved in a short period. But, unlike the enemy, which wants to finish this in a short period, we want to stretch this war and turn the situation into our advantage", he said. Playing this strategy back by refusing to employ strong-arm tactics to regain "liberated zones" while focusing on consolidation of the fringe areas, may turn out to be a clever idea.
