MARITIME SECURITY OF INDIA: CHALLENGES AND OPPORTUNITIES

Dr. Omprakash Dahiya

Maritime security is a comprehensive concept that derives from the systemic nature of the maritime domain presenting multiple and interrelated requirements for cooperative security by state and non-state actors. It addresses traditional and non-traditional security challenges. Maritime security involves coordinating collective and cooperative risk mitigation and vulnerability reduction efforts in order to protect and promote national, regional and global vital interests, objectives and core values, including those relating to state sovereignty, freedom of navigation, economic development, environment and ocean resources, human and social development, and political stability.

The fact is that India is a maritime nation, not just by historical tradition but also because it's geophysical configuration and geo-political circumstances makes it as dependent on the seas as any island nation. With 11 maritime states and island territories of India probably has more seafaring people than the population of most European countries. Asian countries which have brought holistic focus on their maritime sector have not only reaped tremendous economic benefits but also reinforced their maritime security. India still needs a lot to do in this direction.

Challenges:

India's maritime security challenges cover the entire range from low intensity conflict and piracy, all the way to major-power strategic contests. Given its distinctive geography and the shift of global maritime focus from the Atlantic-Pacific combine to the Indo-Pacific continuum, the importance of the Indian Ocean Region in India's national security calculus has increased in the post-Cold War era. Maritime security of India comprised of seaborne trade and infrastructure for its pursuit, management of sea resources, environmental issues and employment of naval forces.

Increased activity throughout the Indian Ocean region due to expanding regional and global trade in goods, ideas, people, and resources has raised a new set of maritime security challenges. Historical state-based concerns such as geopolitical fragility, internal political upheaval, insurgency, inter-state tensions, sea-lane security, and territorial disputes are now coupled with growing threats from non-state sources and asymmetric risks. Among these are growing risks from non-state actors including piracy, terrorism, and trafficking; the impacts of environmental degradation, resource depletion, climate change, and natural disasters; and weak states and failing institutions. These diverse challenges confront an equally diverse set of nations bordering this region. Such diversity in interests and capabilities saddles the region with political tensions and brings with it a greater danger of instability and conflict.

The energy thirsty nations such as China, India and other developing countries have no choice but to import large quantities of energy resources from around the world specially, West Asia. The dependence on the seas to get energy products to sustain their economies is growing progressively. This also brings in the threat of these vessels and products being targeted by both pirates and non-state actors. Chinese units while proceeding for anti-piracy patrols or while returning will plan for engaging the neighbouring navies of India in naval exercises that would gradually witness enhanced bilateral/multilateral exercises. The challenge for South Asia and particularly India is to manage the Chinese advances in the Indian Ocean. The devastating effect of '2004 Tsunami' and other climate change effects are bigger threats for the region specially India. In the traditional security domain, the two incidents of shooting of fishermen in the EEZ of India by an Italian Tanker in 2013 and another shooting by a US ship USS Rappahannock in the waters of Dubai on July last year, bring out dimensions of security challenges as they impinge on normal fisheries and livelihood issues. In both the cases which resulted in the death of innocent Indians, it appears that the guards/crew did not assess the situation correctly and misinterpreted the action as that of pirates/suicide attackers. The period after the defeat of the LTTE has seen increased incidence of the Indian fishermen coming in to conflict with their counter parts in Sri Lanka and also with the SL Navy. There have been allegations and counter allegations about use of excessive force and even fire arms to prevent fishermen from poaching. From the Indian fishermen point of view, historically, the contested waters belonged to India and they have every right to fish in the traditional waters. Having demarcated the maritime boundary with Sri Lanka in 1974, wherein, Kachchativu was gifted to Sri Lanka, the Indian fishermen have been debarred from fishing around that rich fishing grounds around that Island leading to skirmishes and incidents. It is not that only Indian fishermen are guilty of trespassing, the Indian Ocean has witnessed intrusions by fishermen of Pakistan, Bangladesh, Thailand, Myanmar and Sri Lanka who do cross in to each other's territory while

CAREER IN NANOTECHNOLOGY

Dr Anita Kamra Verma

From a scientific viewpoint, nanotechnology marks a new access into the realm of opportunity since it emancipates the sciences from the restraints of space and material precincts. From a research perspective, nanotechnology facilitates scientists to experiment at the molecular level by overcoming practical limitations. Miniaturization is essential to progress towards smaller, faster, and more powerful. Therefore, the manipulation and control of matter at atomic, micro-molecular and macromolecular scales to attribute varied functional properties that differ significantly from the bulk materials create Nanomaterials. The principles of classic physics/chemistry are no longer applicable at nano-dimensions, as the behaviour dramatically changes and the principles of quantum mechanics no longer apply e.g. gold at the nanoscale have optical, mechanical and electrical properties that are very different from the inert properties of bulk/macroscale. The properties like strength, colour, electrical conductivity and weight change at nano-levels; a metal can become a semiconductor at bulk level or an insulator at nano-level. Nanotechnology is the control on design, synthesis, characterisation of matter by monitoring shape and size to maintain the nanoscale, at least in one dimension. So, nanotechnology focuses on matter at the scale or dimensions that are roughly 1 to 100 nanometers (1nm = 10⁻⁹ m) and this measurement science is termed 'Nanometrology'. Transmission Electron Microscopy TEM, Scanning Electron Microscopy (SEM) as well as Optical tweezers (single beam gradient trap) are the equipments used for their measurements.

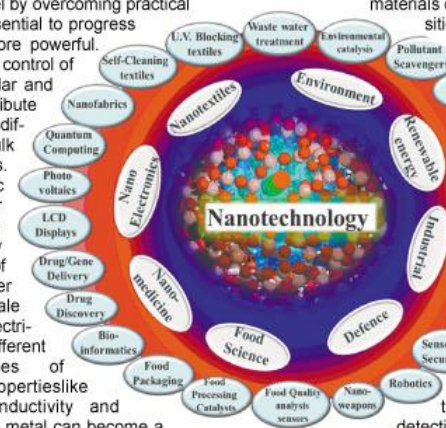

Naturally occurring nanoparticles are categorised as ultrafine particles owing to their heterogeneity both chemically and physically, that are the incidental by products of combustion processes like volcanic ash, soot from forest fires, welding, diesel engines.

Alternatively, engineered nanoparticles designed to produce specific properties in terms of shape, size, surface charge, functional properties and catalytic chemistry. These properties are evident in colloids, aerosols, or powders. The functional behaviour of nanomaterials depends on surface area than particle composition itself. To enhance its reactivity, electrical properties and strength, relative-surface area is the key factor. Synthetic nanoparticles can be purchased or synthesized in the laboratory e.g., laser ablation can be used to synthesize CNTs. Nanomaterials can be fabricated, atom by atom by a process called "bottom-up" or "Top down". The information for this fabrication process is embedded in the material building blocks so that these can self-assemble in the final product. Nanomaterials have an increased surface-to-volume ratio compared to bulk materials. This has significant concerns for all those processes that occur at the surface of a material, such as catalysis and detection.

Fabrication of Nanoparticles

Nanotechnology in its very essence is an interdisciplinary and integrating science that cuts across all basic sciences and engineering disciplines for industrial applications leading to commercialization. A major challenge that nanotechnology faces today is the lack of educated, trained and skilled workers. Paradoxically working on 'small things could lead to a big career', whereby, nanotechnologists are involved in developing novel innovations and applications regularly thereby offering plenty of job opportunities to skilled manpower. Nanotechnology can be applied and has infiltrated in almost every aspect of human life.

Nanotoxicology is the study of interaction of physical and chemical properties of nanoparticles with biological systems that may looking for fish. This will remain a great challenge with security overtones.

MARITIME SECURITY..

There are some serious issues such as Piracy, Terrorism, Safety of mercantile marine trade, proliferation, security of Straits, environmental protection that require deft handling. All these demand great attention to see that India and other stake holders work out strategies to ensure a peaceful environment in the Indian Ocean Region.

It is argued that weak legislations can compromise maritime security. So, it is important to point out that the Coastal Security Bill drafted in 2013 is yet to be tabled. Unfortunately, the draft Piracy Bill placed before the law makers in 2012 lapsed. If India is to fulfil its role as the 'net security provider in the Indian Ocean' and its ambitions as a regional maritime power, the vulnerabilities of its maritime security architecture, cruelly exposed in a series of recent accidents, must be addressed.

Opportunities

Although the Indian security forces had responded swiftly to '26/11 Mumbai attack', but it exposed three significant cracks in India's maritime security calculus, the porous nature of India's coastline; the inadequate surveillance of the maritime domain; and the lack of inter-agency coordination. Post the 26/11 attacks, the Indian government specially, Indian Navy undertook a number of proactive measures to restructure coastal security and push the defensive perimeter further away from the coast into the seas. One of the most significant achievements has been the integration of all maritime stakeholders, including several State and Central agencies into the new coastal security mechanism. Indian Navy has established four Joint Operations Centres (JOC) at Mumbai, Visakhapatnam, Kochi and Port Blair. As a result, there is good coordination, synergy and understanding between all agencies. Navy, Coast Guard and State Police teams have visited coastal villages and fishermen have been made aware of possible threats from the sea and their important role towards strengthening coastal security. This has paid rich dividends in last few years as there have been many incidents, reported by them, leading to successful interceptions. In order to periodically review the readiness of the security agencies and the state administrations in thwarting threats from inimical elements, the Indian Navy has taken the lead in conducting coastal security exercises in every coastal states and in the Island territories in conjunction with the Coast Guard, Marine Police, Customs, and Immigration and Port Authorities etc. As a result of these exercises and drills, there has been a significant improvement in the coordination between all the agencies.

The Indian Navy has now set up the National Command Control Communication Intelligence (NC3I) network that hosts the Information Management and Analysis Centre (IMAC). The focus was on building national maritime domain awareness (NMDA) grid via a number of organisational, operational and technological changes. The network connects 51 radar stations (20 Indian Navy and 31 Coast Guard) located along the coast and on the island territories, and helps collate, fuse and disseminate critical intelligence and information about 'unusual or suspicious movements and activities at sea'. The Indian government has also drawn plans to reinforce the NMDA via multilateral cooperation. It is in talks with at least 24 countries for exchanging information on shipping to ensure that the seas are safe and secure for global commerce. India has placed maritime security high on the agenda through active participation in the Indian Ocean Rim Association (IORA), the Indian Ocean Naval Symposium (IONS), the East Asia Summit (EAS), the ASEAN Defence Ministers Meeting (ADMM) Plus. Additionally, it is in talks with other countries to institutionalise intelligence exchange among the respective security agencies.

A nation with India's maritime assets, challenges and opportunities urgently needs a multi-disciplinary maritime advisory body to conceptualize a vision, draw up plans and monitor activities in the maritime domain. The first task of such a body should be to craft an overarching Maritime Security Policy and thereafter to undertake its integration with India's Maritime Strategy. Only such a synergy can ensure that we draw maximum advantage from the maritime sector - to benefit our economy and also to reinforce maritime security. It is a daunting task to balance economic, environmental, and security interests at the national level. Maritime policy can be seen as the purview of coastal defence, so that the navy or coast guard would have the lead or sole role in determining policy. There are always compelling practical and political reasons to keep maritime decision-making bodies separate.

India's national security community sees the maritime space as an important dimension of its rising power status and a key component of its economic growth and energy security, although the strategic concepts of its maritime role have yet to be fully developed. Enhanced maritime capabilities will nonetheless have consequences for how its neighbors view India's role and ambition and its ability to contribute to regional peace and security.

induce biological insults resulting in toxicity. 'Bionanotechnology' is the analysis of the working of biological "machines" and creating new technologies with existing biological motifs. But 'Nanobiomechanics' combines biomechanics and nanomaterials to create efficient and powerful machines to explore the fundamentals of biological systems.

Applications of Nanotechnology

Nanomedicine/Nanobiotechnology: It deals with emerging new technologies for developing customized solutions for diagnostics, drug/gene delivery and for therapeutics. Biomedical scientists conduct research and design experiments that are extremely sophisticated, specialized alternative medicines to address healthcare and chronic diseases. Nanomaterials such as nanofibers, carbon nanotubes, fullerenes, polymeric nanoparticles, micelles, metallic nanoparticles, solid lipid nanoparticles, quantum dots, dendrimers, niosomes and liposomes are perfect candidates for evolving contrast agents for the imaging and drug delivery. Functionalised nanoparticles are evolving as 'Biomarkers' for early detection of diseases.

Nanotechnology in Food Science can be utilized in different stages of food processing, production and quality control. Nanosensors can be used to identify potential contaminants or diseases that are dangerous to consumers. It may also be used to develop processes to keep food fresh for longer periods of time eg. improving product packaging to prevent microbes from contaminating consumables.

Nanography uses nano-sized ink pigments that may show enhanced features like quick drying of colours for digitally printed images. It creates nanomaterials that consume low energy, create reduced waste, are eco-friendly, have variable data printing, as well as the ability to print reruns as short as a single copy. Hence, nanography influences the cost structure associated with commercial, packaging, folding carton, and publishing printing, and thereby empowering the cost-effective short to medium run lengths.

Nanotechnology in Engineering disciplines: Engineers utilize nanotechnology for many purposes, such as creating nanomaterials, designing computer components, creating explosive-resistant materials and building microscopic sensors. In the computer industry, engineers use nanowires and optics to create microchips with immense storage capacity for data processing.

Engineers working in national defence have found ways to use nanofibers to create light-weight, super-strong materials that can withstand the force of bullets or other explosive devices. Professionals have also developed microscopic sensors that can remotely detect trace amounts of dangerous chemicals or radiation.

Nanotechnology for Renewable Energy:

Nanotechnology may be harnessed to generate excess power by consuming substantially low amounts of energy, making it a dynamic alternative to current methods of generating power.

Nanotechnology in Textile Industry: Consumer products from stain-resistant and anti-wrinkle textiles in clothing, to cosmetics based on nanotechnology are already in the market. The concept 'smart clothing' could monitor your heart rate and other vital signs, as well as self-cleaning fabrics are ready for commercial purposes.

Nano-Filtration: The ratio of surface area to volume alters the functional properties at nanoscales that help create better adsorbents to facilitate water purification. This can allow new kinds of filtering processes using nanomaterials. Nanocomposites may be used for removal of chemical and biological contaminants.

Nanotechnology in Defence: Nanodevices for explosives, propellants and pyrotechnic applications; stealth and camouflage coatings to protect battle tanks and air vehicles by misleading enemy; and reactive adsorbents for chemical warfare agents to protect humans. Nanosensors for the detection of lethal toxic agents, bombs, explosives, etc. to protect our soldiers and human population from impending catastrophes likely to be caused by hostile action of our adversary or as an act of terrorism. Chemical sensors are also being established to meet on-line monitoring requirements of nuclear installations.

Education Requirements for pursuing Nanotechnology:

Interested students from any field of science/engineering can initiate work in nanotechnology at any level as a skilled workforce trained at varied stages are required to meet the estimated personnel challenge. Education levels include a Class XII degree plus rigorous training to qualify as a Technician, an Associate's degree that includes two years of college plus training, a Bachelor's degree that may be a basic science degree (3 years) or a Technical degree (4 years) of college. A Master's degree i.e.

about 6 years of total college time is preferred as a skilled manpower. A Doctorate (about 9 years of college total) is the highest level of training that is sought for a career in Nanotechnology. Associate degree programs may include understanding the instrumentation and the techniques to manufacture and characterize nanomaterials. Nanotechnology internships are important to apply for jobs as Associates. Food and agricultural scientists can apply with only a bachelor's degree, but a medical/biomedical professional should pursue a doctorate degree to enable them to conduct advanced research projects. Although the development and application of nanotechnology is still at a nascent research phase, specific engineered nanomaterials have been produced and commercialized eg. Sun screens and cosmetics, light-weight, stronger racquets and long-lasting tennis balls, conceptualizing stain-free clothing and mattresses, Polymer films used in displays for cell phones, digital cameras and laptops, glass coatings for faster cleaning, protective and glare-reducing coatings for eye glasses and cars.

As nature exists successfully in nanoscale, so there is ample optimism in a career in nanotechnology.

NEWS DIGEST

- Prime Minister Narendra Modi has appealed the people who can afford buying LPG at market rates to give up subsidy on cooking gas. Motivating well-offs to give up subsidised LPG, he has asked over 2 lakh 80 thousand consumers to give up LPG subsidy and save Rs.100 crore to the exchequer. This money saved will be utilised for the poorest of the poor.
- The Union Cabinet has cleared pooling of natural gas prices. The move will help revive stuck power plants run on natural gas. At least 31 plants based on gas will be benefited from this decision.
- The Supreme Court has struck down Section 66A of the Information Technology Act calling it unconstitutional and untenable. The court has said it interferes with freedom of speech and expression enshrined in the Constitution. Terming liberty of thought and expression as cardinal, the apex court said, the public's right to know is directly affected by section 66A which gives the police power to arrest a person for posting offensive content online and provides for a three-year jail term.
- India and Qatar have signed six pacts of understanding in several key areas including Transfer of Sentenced Persons and Radio and Television. The MoUs were exchanged between External Affairs Minister Sushma Swaraj and her Qatari counterpart Dr Khalid Bin Mohammed Al Attiyah. The agreement on Transfer of Sentenced Persons will enable the sentenced persons to be near their families and help their social rehabilitation.
- Former Prime Minister Atal Bihari Vajpayee has been conferred with the Bharat Ratna. The Government had announced the Bharat Ratna for Mr Vajpayee and freedom fighter Madan Mohan Malviya in December last year. 43 people have been honoured with the prestigious award since its inception, including scientist C V Raman, cricketer Sachin Tendulkar, singer Lata Mangeshkar and politician C Rajagopalachari.
- Legendary actor Shashi Kapoor will be given the Dada Saheb Phalke Award for the year 2014. Mr Kapoor's cinematic journey as a lead actor started in 1961 with the movie Dharmputra and acted in more than 100 Hindi films. Mr Kapoor is the 46th Dada Saheb Phalke Award Winner.
