DIGITAL EMPLOYMENT EXCHANGE TO BOOST MSMEs

Divyanshu Kumar

India is one of the youngest nations of the world brimming with confidence and hope. Two-thirds of its population is below 35 years of age, giving it immense opportunity to it to become prosperous by providing employment opportunities to its unskilled, semi-skilled, skilled and highly skilled workforce. We have been predominantly a service based economy. Service Sector contributes around 60 per cent to our GDP. However, the new government plans to improve the sluggish manufacturing sector as its labour intensive industries have potential to create more jobs for youth of the country.

With this in mind, Prime Minister Narendra Modi launched 'Make in India' global initiative programme on 25th September last year on the occasion of birth anniversary of Pandit Deen Dayal Upadhyay to promote investment in manufacturing sector. He said on the occasion, "We need to bring some changes in Indian economy. In this change, on the one hand, manufacturing growth is to be promoted, at the same time we need to ensure that direct benefit goes to the youngsters of India. He should get employment so that there is improvement in the economic situation of even the poorest family. These poor should move towards middle class and their purchasing power should improve."

He added, "If industrialists feel that industry needs certain type of trained manpower, we will say that take this ITI and train the manpower locally according to your needs. You will get a good worker for your industry and our ITI will start running. Our youngsters will get employment, his family will be strengthened and in our growth path."

As far as white collar jobs are concerned, there are many avenues avail-run by the governments at state level for primarily government jobs. However, there is hardly any platform or avenue available for these youngsters to meet their prospective employers in the private sector, especially in small scale industries as these are mainly unorganised or semi-organised.

The scenario has, however, changed recently when Union Minister of Micro, Small and Medium Enterprises (MSME), Shri Kalraj Mishra, launched Digital Employment Exchange for Industries. During the launch he said that through this, job seekers could find employers and vice-versa. Recalling his interaction with the industry stalwarts, Mr Mishra said that industrialists have raised concerns about lack of skilled workforce not only for them but also for their suppliers, which are usually Micro, Small & Medium Enterprises. Through this digital Employment Exchange, skilled youth have got a platform where they could get employment for themselves. It would also provide industrial units the opportunities to find suitable manpower. This is also in sync with government's 'Digital India' campaign.

How it works

Take for an example, a person in the name of Debjyoti Saikia, born and brought up in Silchar, Assam; has done two-year certificate course in machinist from Tool Room and Training Centre in Guwahati. He wants to work in the field of better purchasing power will help the economy. We need to push such a cycle."

This initiative has now started bearing fruits. The manufacturing sector grew by 7.1 per cent in the financial year 2014-15 against growth of 5.3 per cent in the previous fiscal. Finance Secretary Rajeev Mehrishi said, "The encouraging part is the growth in manufacturing, which would also mean that we are also creating jobs able for not only employers but also for prospective employees. There are thousands of placement agencies. In addition to that, there are many digital platforms also available for the purpose, including nukari.com, mosterindia.com, jobshah.com, shine.com. However, when it comes to blue and grey collar job openings for semi-skilled and skilled workforce, there are employment exchanges

CAREER IN SOCIAL WORK

A. S. Raha

If the student in you thinks that you are not meant for fixed timing jobs of 9 am to 5 pm, looking at computer screen doing strategies and instead believe that driving social change and bringing smiles on faces of underprivileged is what makes you happy, then here is your chance. Even though not promoted much as a popular career choice but social sector job opportunities are silently booming in our country.

India is fast emerging as a superpower, however, it has still not joined the league of the developed nations. The reasons are simple -poverty, hunger, unemployment, lack of access to basic amenities such as clean water, electricity, sanitation and healthcare still continue to be challenging issues for India. However the government with support from social and development organizations are fast bridging the gaps.

Helping and trying to solve the puzzles of these complex social and economic problems, there are social sector professionals who are working in villages, towns and even metropolitan cities of India and carrying out interventions towards improving lives of people. Often also referred as 'social workers', these professionals are, however, trained and driven by a strong commitment of driving social transformation and beyond the popular perception that these workers are often working as volunteers, the fact remains that the main streamed jobs in this sector are both mentally and financially rewarding.

The social sector professionals as is self-explanatory are employed in Non-Government Organizations (NGOs), Development and Funding agencies,

Civil Society groups and even with the Government agencies implementing development programs. The work primarily revolves around responding to the social needs of people leading to overall social development. Based on their expertise and education background, these professionals are involved in a variety of interventions. While you could be teaching kids in a slum while working for national level not for profit; you could have friends who might be working to improve sanitation condition for tribals in some remote Indian village. Similarly some of your colleagues in the sector might be working to preserve some indigenous varieties of butterflies in a national park as they face extinction. And yet not all professionals in this sector are working in remote lands. There are also people who do research and write about the work that their organizations are doing and hence communicate the change stories to the world outside. The researchers working in this sector generate research data that helps in better policy formulation or better implementation. They work in both government and non-government agencies.

Experts believe that apart from engagement of millions of volunteers every year, the social sector often also termed as 'development sector' or even 'not for profit' sector employs more than two million professionals, a figure that is set to only rise. Senior professionals who are working with national and international NGOs believe that enormous opportunity awaits in the areas of healthcare, education, skills development, civil rights, water and sanitation, climate change and advocacy. With the Companies Act, 2013, even corporates have begun to kick start new corporate social responsibility (CSR) activities or scale up and augment existing ones, leading to a massive increase in such career opportunities.

Talking about the skills required for getting into the social sector, Sharda automobile component manufacturing. Apart from getting opportunities through placements in his institute, he also has option of registering himself on the portal of digital employment exchange to get his kind of job. For this, he has to first visit Ministry of Micro, Small and Medium Enterprises (MSME) run website <http://www.eex.dcmsme.gov.in> and register himself on the link of 'I am job seeker'. He will then fill up the job registration form on this highly dynamic website. Mr Saikia has to furnish his essential personal details, including, date of birth, mobile number, e-mail id on the website. After completing this, he would instantly receive login id and password on his mobile as well as on e-mail.

Mr Saikia is now allowed to login on the website and provide further details about himself. He would then fill up resume and upload the form carrying details of his educational qualifications, specialisation in relevant field, work experiences, training as well as miscellaneous details. He would also have to provide two references that can authenticate his antecedents. He also has the option of choosing his preferred place of employment. Since he has done his course for employment in automobile sector, he filled Pune as his preferred place of work. By doing this, he is now a full member of the website and any registered employer can access his profile for recruitment.

Employers also have to register themselves on the website to access this talented workforce through 'I am an employer' window. The organisation would also have to provide all the vital information about itself to get login and password on registered e-mail id and designated cellphone number. Employer is now empowered to search resumes of prospective employees. Authorised person from the organisation would feed all its requirements and its place of manufacturing unit on the website. For instance, the prospective employer is from Maharashtra auto hub Pune city and wants to employ a mechanic matching the expectation of Mr Debijoti Saikia. The employer then calls Mr Saikia for the interview and demonstration of his skills in Pune. He goes to Pune and does a good job on these and gets selected.

A senior official in the Ministry of MSME while speaking to Employment News said that they were doing 'match making' between prospective employees and employers. He said there are around 2.5 lakh students registered on the website.

Mr Saikia now starts working in Pune and stays there for almost five years. He is a hard worker but he is not satisfied with his job alone. He wants to realise his dream as he has an entrepreneurial mind. Now, he wants to go back to his state Assam and start a small manufacturing unit of an automobile component in Guwahati. He has taken all the requisite clearances from the government agencies there to start his manufacturing unit from a rented garage in the city with initial manpower of five. For that purpose, he has taken loan from a scheduled bank to manufacture a component of gear box for sports car, which his current employer produces. He has also entered an agreement with his current employer who would buy his product, which would be of very good quality with competitive pricing.

Suddenly, he becomes employer from an employee. While doing so he generated employment opportunity for this under-developed state. He would follow the same route of his earlier employer to appoint workers in his newly formed firm. If this idea succeeds, that would be a boon for not only youth of urban areas but also less developed areas of North-East.

The road ahead

A senior official in the ministry said that they were working on a format so that the industry can upload jobs and seekers can see these on the website. He informed that they were getting very good responses from the industry, some of these are offering fee for these services. He also said, "We are offering free services to employees and employers at the moment and if everything goes right, we would charge minimal fees from the employers in the long run so that the website is not dependent on government funds for its sustainability. However, there would no charge from job seekers." Both job seekers and employers may visit the website <http://www.eex.dcmsme.gov.in> and take benefit out of it.

CAREERS IN...

Gautam who is currently working for livelihoods and micro-enterprise development of rural non-farm producers in Central India says, "The generic abilities needed in these jobs include all the management education which any prestigious institution provides plus empathy to use this education for best interest of community. Specific skills, to quote few, are project management, fund raising & proposal writing, monitoring and evaluation." Summing up beautifully he adds, "All you need is an average brain and golden heart because beyond formal education, social sector professionals remain life-long learners as it is the community which teaches them new perspectives to solve big problems in very simple ways."

But then there are challenges as well. The notion of converting social work into a full time job is still not a very popularly accepted idea in India. Drawing lessons from his own diverse experience, Satya Prakash, Program Manager, FXB India Suraksha, a non-profit company focusing on child rights and protection, access to quality education, poverty and livelihood and improved health status says, "The opportunities in the development sector have gone up immensely. But for majority of us coming from middle class family, professional engagement in the development sector is unfortunately not accepted as right choice as compared to an engineer, doctor, government servant, corporate employees etc. But times have changed. It is no more a jhola-chaap (haversack) job and for those professionally involved, there are job securities and growth as compared to any other job sector in the country".

What is equally interesting is the initiatives taken by government of India to engage with social work and rural development professionals in accelerating development processes in most backward districts of India. Prime Minister Rural Development Fellowship, an initiative of Ministry of Rural Development (MoRD), Government of India (GoI) in collaboration with State Governments in 2012 is one such example. The Fellowship has the twin objective of engaging young professionals to work with District Collectors in improving the development programmes as well as to build them as a cadre of development facilitator.

Sharing his experiences, Sourabh Bhattacharjee who completed his Post Graduation in Rural Development from Xavier Institute of Social Service in Ranchi and is currently a Rural Development Fellow, based in Purulia in West Bengal says, "PMRDF is an amalgamation of professionals from various fields of study viz. engineering, social science, doctors etc. The kind of experience one gathers from being a PMRD fellow opens up many career options in front of him/her. One can start his/her NGO and work on a particular area of interest whereas one can also contribute through consultancy in a specific area. Now a days, CSR could be an inspiring sector to experiment one's managerial potential and skills in the social sector."

Making broader observations from his familiarity of the sector, Sourabh adds, "It is inevitable that the thought of choosing the social sector as a career option would though require sincere efforts and dedication initially but in long term definitely would lead to greater contentment and satisfaction. There is ample scope of intervention in this sector ranging from agriculture, skill, livelihood, etc."

The job satisfaction in this sector is perhaps the biggest attraction for young professionals. Sharda Gautam who was an engineer working with an automobile giant and quit his job to study rural management in Institute of Rural Management, Anand says, "Earlier my interaction was with cars, now I my interaction is with human beings and my actions influence their lives - that's the difference. Social sector these days offers decent pay structures vis-a-vis cost of living at the locations where field implementation projects are. However this definitely cannot and should not be compared with corporate salaries. In other professions success might mean leaving ones' foot-mark' behind, but in social sector it's the 'mark in hearts' which you leave behind. The satisfaction which every smile you create gives has no parity with money."

The bottom-line therefore is if you want to make an earning out of your desire to drive social change then here is your career option. And like any other sector, even here sky is the limit for hard work.

In order to step into the sector, the basic courses that students can pursue and further specialize include:

1. Bachelor in Social Work (B.S.W)/Bachelor of Arts Social work B.A (SW): Class XII pass students are eligible.
2. M.S.W/M.A (SW): Any graduate student is eligible but preference given to social sciences graduates.
3. M.Phil, Duration: Candidates with master graduation degree of M.S.W can apply.
4. Ph.D., Eligibility: Candidates with M.S.W or M.Phil degree can apply.

However there are courses for rural management, rural development and even NGO management that pave way for interesting and rewarding jobs in the social sector.

A list of institutes where students can explore such courses include:

1. Tata Institute of Social Sciences, Hyderabad, Guwahati and Tuljapur - Offers Bachelor in Social Work, MA in Social Work, Integrated BA -MA and Masters Social Entrepreneurship.

2. University of Delhi, University Road, Delhi- Offers BA and MA Social Work.
3. Panjab University, Chandigarh offers MA in Social Work
4. Madras School of Social Work Offers MA in human resource management, M.Sc. counseling psychology, MA in NGO Management, MA in HR and organizational Development.
5. Jamia Millia University Jamia Nagar, New Delhi: BA and MA Social Work.
6. The Indian Institute of Social Welfare & Business Management (IISWBM) Management House, College Square West, Kolkata: MBA, MPSP.
7. Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar Institute of Social Sciences Arba
8. University of Rajasthan JLN Marg, Jaipur
9. University of Mumbai M.G. Road, Fort, Mumbai - Offers Bachelor and Masters in social Work.
10. University of Calcutta, Kolkata

The above mentioned list is however an indicative list as there are many other prestigious institutes which are providing similar specialized courses.
